Hi John-

Just wanted to let you know that it will just be Robby and Brynne in the meeting with Dr. Kahn and Dr. Anwar tomorrow. It's on your calendar as a dial-in, but when Kate confirmed the meeting with them today she told them that your presence (on the phone) was tentative since you're on the West Coast. If you'd prefer to skip that's fine, but she will add a dial-in to the calendar invite tomorrow morning in case you'd like to join.

You probably recall that Senator Reid originally requested that we set up the meeting a few months back. See my original correspondence with Kate and Reid's assistant below.

Let me know if you have any questions!

Thanks!

Hi Adelle,

Robby Mook spoke a few weeks ago with Senator Reid about facilitating a meeting between Dr. Kahn, Marlon Marshall, and himself here at campaign headquarters in New York.

Two dates that would work in both of their schedules are July 13th and 14th. Are you able to liaise with him to see if we could make either of these work?

Thank you so much!

LEAD STORY

JJN LAUNCHES WORK ON INCLUSIVE INDUSTRIALIZATION IN GLOBAL VALUE CHAINS

A new research initiative at the JustJobs Network asks how trade in global value chains (GVCs) can promote "inclusive industrialization," one of the newly minted goals of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. While 80 percent of global trade today takes place through value chains that span across nations, too little is understood about how these global supply networks reshape labor markets and what sort of employment opportunities they create.

As a beginning to its work, JJN, together with the International Development Research Centre of Canada and UN ESCAP's Asia-Pacific Research and Training Network on Trade (ARTNet), hosted a day-long workshop in Bangkok on inclusive industrialization in GVCs on February 29th. The workshop focused on how participation in global value chains is transforming employment and working conditions in Southeast Asia, engaging a select group of experts and policymakers from the region and beyond.

JUSTJOBS JOINS CONSULTATION ON FAIR WAGES IN THE SEED SUPPLY CHAIN

JustJobs Network was recently invited to share its research at a multi-stakeholder meeting hosted by the Fair Labor Association (FLA) and Syngenta in Hyderabad, India. The meeting aimed to formulate strategies for ensuring that all workers in the hybrid seed supply chain are paid no less than statutory minimum wages. JJN's Tanvir Malik presented research on wages in the agricultural sector to a diverse audience of private sector players, civil society leaders and researchers. As a member of the steering committee, JJN will continue to advise FLA and Syngenta on the initiative. JustJobs is also working with FLA on forthcoming research on best practices in compensation in agriculture supply chains.

PIDS, established under the government, boasts a 40-year history of providing research for planning and policy formulation in the Philippines. ZIPAR, which supports the government, private sector, civil society and other stakeholders in Zambia with evidence-based policy recommendations, recently launched a More and Better Jobs flagship project.

members to sign the letter, noted that a similar effort by the government in the 1990s to require phone companies to build a backdoor for encrypted voice calls was rebuffed. “If they couldn’t pull it off at the end of the Cold War, they sure as hell aren’t going to pull it off now,” he said.

Comey, he said, “is the best FBI director I’ve ever seen,” but “he’s wrong on this [issue].”

Congress, too, is unlikely to pass legislation that would require technology companies to develop keys or other modes of access to their products and services in the post-Snowden area.

Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle have expressed skepticism toward the pleas of law enforcement agencies. Rep. Ted Lieu, a California Democrat with a computer science degree, called backdoors in software “technologically stupid.”

Ronald L. Rivest, an inventor of the RSA encryption algorithm (his name is the “R” in “RSA”), said standards can be weakened to allow law enforcement officials access to encrypted data. “But,” he said, “you’ve done great damage to our security infrastructure if you do that.”

The issue is not simply national, said Rivest, a computer science professor at MIT who signed the letter. “Once you make exceptions for U.S. law enforcement, you’re also making exceptions for the British, the French, the Israelis and the Chinese, and eventually it’ll be the North Koreans.”

The signatories include policy experts who normally side with national-security hawks. Paul Rosenzweig, a former Bush administration senior policy official at the Department of Homeland Security, said: “If I actually thought there was a way to build a U.S.-government-only backdoor, then I might be persuaded. But that’s just not reality.”

Rosenzweig said that “there are other capabilities” that law enforcement can deploy. They will be “less satisfying,” he said, but “they will make do.”

Privacy activist Kevin Bankston organized the letter to maintain pressure on the White House. “Since last fall, the president has been letting his top law enforcement officials criticize companies for making their devices more secure and letting them suggest that Congress should pass pro-backdoor legislation,” said Bankston, policy director of the New America Foundation’s Open Technology Institute.

“It’s time for Obama to put an end to these dangerous suggestions that we should deliberately weaken the cybersecurity of Americans’ products and services,” he said. “It’s time for America to lead the world toward a more secure future rather than a digital ecosystem riddled with vulnerabilities of our own making.”

critical choice: Will it adopt policies that foster a global digital ecosystem that is more secure, or less? That choice may well define the future of the Internet in the 21st century," the letter says.

The letter is largely timed to influence an internal review of options that is being prepped for Obama, reported first by The Washington Post (http://wapo.st/1FvUPcP). The group, organized by New America's Open Technology Institute, reads like a who's who of the cyber world. Signers include Access, ACLU, Center for Democracy & Technology, Electronic Frontier Foundation, The Tor Project, Apple, Cisco, CloudFlare, Facebook, Google, Hewlett-Packard, Microsoft, Mozilla, Twitter and Yahoo. Thank god you made me laugh about this.

I feel like we are just replacing one disfunction with another. And I am going to tell him that to no avail, but why not? I think he needs different leadership for his PO operation.

I called Victoria to re apportionment on things like IT, HR, corespondence - which as we all know is fine b/c we have been doing it but what we now also know is how imprefectly that accounting was being done (e.g., correspondence reported to justin that very little if any time was spent on non-foundation matters so they didn't need to turn in any hours).

She said fine but said there always is audit risk that will show inaccurate apportionment hence why most folks of privilge just prefer to pay it themselves to avoid the risk.

He's of course out despite an agreed time to speak at noon (and still not back yet) so I know this will drag on until tonight.

This is the block updated from our conversation Saturday. A few things:

it sounds like getting a picture of taking the girls to school would involve a waiver. What is a 2nd option for a photo that day?

Do we have a podium sign with the seal being printed somewhere?

We have locked a ballroom at the Hyatt for avails. We are trying to lock an additional ballroom for the meeting followed by avail for Friday.

We are close to having office space locked for Wed-Friday. Adam Hitchcock will update later today. Hopefully Ariel Cap which is one block from our HQ and one block from Hyatt.

We should get this to BO if no one has issues.

LCV Hails Choice of Senator Joe Biden for Vice Presidential Nomination

WASHINGTON, DC - The League of Conservation Voters (LCV), which works to turn environmental values into national priorities, applauds Barack Obama's choice of Senator Joe Biden as his running mate. Biden will heighten the level of environmental discourse on the campaign trail and, as Vice President, will be a strong voice for a new, clean energy future for this country.

"With a lifetime LCV environmental score of 83%, Joe Biden recognizes that ending our addiction to oil is vital to our national security," LCV President Gene Karpinski said. "Senator Biden is a long-time leader on key energy and environmental issues, and the members of LCV enthusiastically support Senator Obama's choice."

In 2007 alone, Biden voted to strengthen CAFÉ standards and to repeal unjust subsidies to oil companies. In 1986, he introduced the first bill designed to limit global warming pollution.

Biden has been a leader on global warming issues, chairing Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings on the national security implications of unchecked global warming. He teamed with Republican Senator Dick Lugar to co-author and pass a resolution calling on the Bush Administration to return to international negotiations to address climate change. He has sponsored and supported numerous bills throughout his career that would decrease America's dependence on foreign oil and increase investment in new technologies and renewable fuels. Biden has sponsored a bill to increase fuel economy standards for all automobiles, voted yes on reducing oil usage by 40% by 2025, and rejected drilling in ANWR; measures that have strong environmental and economic benefits for America.

"Barack Obama's plan for global warming and energy independence is the most substantive, comprehensive plan ever put forward by a nominee for President," said Karpinski. "Biden's progressive energy stance will only serve to augment Obama's visionary plan. They will usher in a new era of environmental leadership."

John --

In the final push to get America covered, OFA supporters have together committed to more than 500,000 volunteer hours to the cause.

Put it this way: Those supporters could have stayed home and watched all seven seasons of The West Wing 4,578 times instead.

I'm glad they didn't -- yesterday we heard that 6 million Americans have already signed up for coverage.

That's the power of grassroots organizing.

This is a movement we're building, and we're counting on supporters like you at critical times like this. We're updating our records, and according to the one associated with this exact email address, here's what we have:

-- Supporter Status: Active
-- 2014 Membership: Pending
-- Suggested action: Donate $5 or more today.

Our March 31st fundraising deadline is absolutely critical.

I know firsthand that major budget decisions are made based on how many supporters chip in. It determines the grassroots program I get to run, and the resources we have to invest in the future of organizing.

We make sure your donations are put to work with the big picture in mind. Just look at our Spring Fellows program -- we accepted 1,751 organizers into an intense training that will send them out into the world ready to be leaders in the fight for progressive change.

While the other side is spending millions still trying to roll back Obamacare, or whatever other progress they don't like, we're driving this movement forward.

If that's the kind of work you believe in, then I'm asking you to chip in today and help build it:

Welcome to debate night.

Join us at around 9 p.m. EST as Nick Confessore, Maggie Haberman, Alan Rappeport and our fact-check team provide live analysis of the final Republican presidential debate before the Iowa caucuses.

Donald J. Trump is skipping the event in protest, leaving Senator Ted Cruz of Texas, Senator Marco Rubio of Florida, Ben Carson, Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey, Jeb Bush, Gov. John R. Kasich of Ohio, and Senator Rand Paul of Kentucky as the participants in the prime time debate, hosted by Fox News.

Here is what to look for in a Trumpless debate and here is how to watch it. And here is an interactive feature on the small-town Iowans who could have an outsized role in deciding outcome.

Study of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations' Investigation and Report on the JPMorgan Chase London Whale Trades

The Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations began their investigation into the so-called London Whale trades after the high profile losses forced CEO Jamie Dimon to face congressional inquiry before the House Financial Services and Senate Banking Committees. What appears to be a bipartisan investigation led by Sens. Levin, Coburn, and McCain raises the most important question of congressional investigations– why did the subcommittee decide that this incident was worthy of a nine-month investigation? I believe a look into the scope, conduct, and potential motives of the investigation can help establish if it was a laudable use of congressional investigatory power and resources, a means to coax federal regulators on key policy provisions, or perhaps an avenue to further pillory an industry that had become a politically profitable whipping boy. Especially at a time when key elements of the Dodd Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, such as the Volcker Rule authored by Sen. Levin, were in crucial stages of drafting or implementation, it is important to assess whether the investigation and subsequent report were conducted in pursuit of genuine congressional and public interests or with other motives and objectives.

I trust you and Mary are having some free time this summer. Pat and I are as always enjoying the cape - biking, swimming in the ocean and cooking fish.

Do you have patience or interest for a talk about implications of the anticipated release of CIA detention and interrogation reports? I know it is not in your remit so you may want to spend the time. Moreover, I do not have any brilliant suggestions. But, I am convinced that there will be two sure consequences: significant moral and fairness concerns among the Langely work force, and a spate of actions brought by our European friends at the world court.

I continue to work hard on providing Ernie with helpful advice from SEAB.

Hello Mr. Podesta,

I hope you are well. I am writing you to arrange a meeting between Hip Hop icon and visionary Q-Tip and Democratic presidential frontrunner Hillary Clinton. He would like to meet with her to discuss ways he can be used as bridge to the Hip Hop generation during the 2016 presidential campaign.

Q-Tip who is an ambassador member of Harry Belafonte's Sankofa.org has long been highly committed to issues of social justice. Q-Tip is devoted to amplifying the voices of the disenfranchised in an effort to promote justice, peace and equal rights for all. He is a big supporter of the work Mrs. Clinton has done throughout her career and has also worked alongside former president Bill Clinton at a 2003 DNC fundraiser. He even served as DJ for Chelsea Clinton's 25th birthday party in 2005. He's had a lasting track record with the Clinton's throughout the years. In fact, he had hoped to see Mrs. Clinton at his close friend Tory Burch's fundraiser tomorrow in The Hamptons. However, due to a prior commitment in Los Angeles, he will be not be able to make it.

Q-Tip would love to have short one-on-one with Mrs. Clinton as soon as her schedule permits. He will return to New York City on Monday.

Please let me know what can be arranged at your earliest convenience. Q-Tip is passionate about helping Mrs. Clinton secure a victory in this presidential race. Thank you in advance for your time.

All the best,

Betsy Jones

Subject:	HRC Super Volunteers - ALABAMA APPEARANCE

Team:

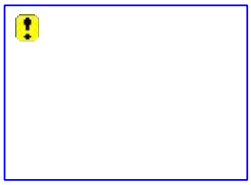

It is almost Midnight as we write this. As HRC Super Volunteers located in Mobile, AL, we are writing to share with you some of the benign comments which we have been privy to via Social Media since the press release concerning Hillary's speech at the Alabama Democratic Conference planned for 10/17/15. One of the big reasons for the HRC SUPER VOLUNTEERS is to help flag the complexities and navigate the internal politics of each state. We think and we feel that this matter is complex and unique to Alabama. We worry that if the campaign does not balance this appearance in the state with another appearance in the state (preferably one which does not have a financial component associated with it) it may alienate the rest of the party in the state. If that were to happen, another campaign could easily swoop in learning from the mistake of their predecessor with ease. We do not want our efforts to be eroded as they are crucial to maintaining the firewall of support.

Thank you in advance for your attention to this matter.

Timothy Bolden and Vivian Beckerle

Hillary Clinton to address Alabama Democratic Conference in Hoover

The Democratic front-runner will speak at the ADC convention at The Wynfrey Hotel.

Read more...

As you should know, for two years the state democratic party has, by leadership of Joe Reed, killed all nominees for the empty seats of the state democratic party in dozens of AL counties, including Baldwin.
Last night, I received an email invitation to a Birmingham speech by Hillary Clinton. I was taken aback by the invitation, which STARTED at $150/person (since other candidates, including Trump, are free). Today I discovered the invitation was for a Reed fundraiser.

My opinion is that Clinton, endorsed by our state party's leader, Joe Reed, has partnered with Reed's ADC, which supports white/black segregation of our democratic party.
Therefore, since I cannot trust the Clinton campaign, I intend to work AGAINST Clinton (not that her campaign cares about the opinion of Alabamians in Baldwin County).

I will NEVER support any candidate that supports Reed or his active efforts to segregate our party. Baldwin remains, by the way, unrepresented in the state party because Joe Reed won't allow our seats to be represented.
Given the nature of how Joe Reed's ADC is usurping democratic choice in supporting presidential candidates, I now will work against the nomination of Hillary Clinton. Since Mrs. Clinton has decided.to support the segregation of the Alabama Democratic Party, I will campaign against her.

Now I know Reed put it together. So I now will quit the Clinton campaign and work for either Bernie or Joe. Haven't decided yet. Can't trust Clinton to have decent judgement or that she doesn't support Reed's active segregation of tje democratic

Subject: Update

My update is as follows:

1. JOM: I had a good conversationw ith JOM on Monday. She was very gracious; honored to be considered (and very complimentary of RM); did not think there was a role that made sense for her to move her family given her role as deputy campaign manager for 2012 where she had accountability for building and operating substantial aspects of the campaign. Would be happy to be considered to be a part-time senior advisor if that made sense for the ultimate manager. She would be willing to travel back and forth and shared that in 2012, they had senior managers who had accountability for areas or projects so there was clear lines and expectations -- that is a model in which she would be able to participate best. I asker here wehre she thought, given the breadth of her experience she could best add value -- she said in two places: 1) as sounding board to manager on what and how they structured and the campaign (and is happy to do that now without compensation since much of that will happen in the next two months) and 2) as end-user consumer/evaluator and partner to ensure the tools built meet the needs of field in specific places, including what tools are really valuable and what are not and how to design to outcomes that are practical and accessible for field staff.

2. DG -- exchanged emails with DG; she is on holiday until 5 January; we are connecting that Monday; I don't know that she will be looking to move from where she landed at her firm but will push; JJS advised that she is terrific though he thinks of her less operationally and more at the intersection of policy, politics and action (e.g., she believes she is excellent at policy and politics).

3. Self-Research -- spoke to HRC. As we discussed, her definition of what she sees remaining with personal lawyers and HFS is the narrow areas we discussed (e.g., taxes, health, finances/speeches, family) though she added BZ. I shared that HFS can continue to manage in partnership with outside personal counsel (including DEK, HT, me) but that self-research as a whole (and explained the larger paradigm) should be in NY and run by someone sitting in NYC,with which she agreed. We discussed HFS; she wants her doing these areas, vetting, and personnel from a perch in the Legal Counsel operation or the COO operation -- RM let's discuss so it is consistent with your vision, organizational paradigm and goals.

4. WC --- she executed her paperwork and will be live in DC or NYC (she wants to be wherever RM will be) effective January 12 (the week before she has to do some transition work for her team member who will be stepping in for 90 days). I agreed to secure her housing -- which is done for NYC -- but if she is to come to DC, I need to do that so let me know.

I think those are all my updates.

Dear Cheryl, Bruce, Jack, all:

We are set for WH Counsel o
Office reunion for Saturday night, December 13.
I will reserve an area at 8 pm at Rumors, 19th and M, for the food and libations into the evening. Before then,at 7 pm, we will for the Roast, MC'd by the infamous and formidable Roaster, Lanny Breuer, at the offices of Levick, next door, 1900 M Street, 4th floor.

I need 1) RSVPS from all on this list and 2) please send me names and email addresses of everyone you can think of - whenever they served. Our focus is on the 95-00 era but all alumni are welcome. (For example, Bernie Nusbaum and I have stayed in touch and I will certainly invite him. Friends who served in press and political offices at WH, such as McCurry, Sosnick, Rahm, et al. --whom we attorneys often tormented -- will be welcome, as well as friends then at DoJ, including our friend who is the current AG.

Look forward to hearing from you and getting your lists/ema addresses.

Contact point and coordinator for this event is Maddie Melendez, 202-973-5346 (copied above), who has managed to survive working with me (or me for her) since I left WH, or 15 years!

Regards,

Lanny

Ok - the response from all - and I mean all - has been enthusiastic for reunion of Clinton WH Counsel's office circa the Quinn-Mills era plus or minus whatever.

So I am going to going a head and propose a date:

Saturday December 13 early evening somewhere in DC - or Sun Dec 14 brunch hour - or both.
Less likely since close to Christmas but another option would be Sat Dec 20 or Sun Dec 21 brunch or both.

All: please vote.

The idea: the WH Counsels roast the deputies, the deputies roast back, and the rest of us roast everyone -- and Lanny Breuer - with the odd title of "Special Counsel (not that Lannythinks he is "special"), and with the odd first name that is not a nickname - as the MC.

Please respond if either of these weekends work and which one in order of preference.

Maybe even our former client can be found back in the USA this time of year to make it too, or could send a recorded message reminding us how much he loves lawyers!

Special note to Bruce Lindsey: please come! We need you for special roast material!

May ask all on this list to:

1) tell me "yes" you can make it on the 13th/14th or 20th/21st. I will circulate the consensus choice. And
2) send me names and email addresses of all you can think of who should be invited.

I will then let all know whether the 13th/14th or 20th/21st works for the most people.

Here's hoping we can pull this off.

Best to all,

Lanny

Maddow says it's awkward for the two to appear together based on their relatives running for president. Discusses the implication of G.W. Bush's record as president on Jeb Bush's changes of being elected in 2016. Maddow compares the liability of the Clinton Foundation for HRC to the post-presidential behavior of G.W. Bush – draws on example of G.W. Bush taking money from a veteran's charity to give a speech – and asks whether this will be an issue for Jeb. Panelist says people have been comparing this to the 47% comment, but he feels that is an unfair comparison. Says people across the aisle want a stronger economy – says Bush's 4% growth goal is unrealistic unless people work longer hours. Jess McIntosh from Emily's List says that it's not about productivity, Americans are a very productive workforce. Says HRC is talking about the need to reform our overtime law because people are going so far beyond the 40 hours workweek without being properly compensated. Says Jeb says we just need to try a little harder to get the economy to be stronger. --Lawrence O'Donnell reports on magazines who have been putting Elizabeth Warren on the cover and claiming that she haunts HRC and builds support for Bernie Sanders. Time Magazine reporter Michael Scherer is a guest saying that most ideological energy for democrats is with Elizabeth Warren and most campaign energy is with Bernie Sanders for the democrats. Says that HRC is struggling to get crowds of 800 people in New Hampshire while Bernie Sanders can show up in rural Iowa and get 2500. Says someone like Sanders or Warren is channeling the energy in the party that has been building against Wall Street and big money in a way that HRC is not necessarily comfortable with. Says we will find out more when HRC gives her economic speech on Monday. Host mentions HRC switching sides in 2005 as a senator against Elizabeth Warren's attempt on bankruptcy protections. Says Warren has not yet endorsed Sanders. Jess McIntosh says that Warren signed a letter urging HRC to run in the first place which shows a lot of the rivalry set up that has been happening from the media, but that HRC and Warren share a lot of the same language and that should be apparent in Monday's speech. McIntosh anticipates commentary after HRC's speech being that HRC adopted a lot of Warren economic policy, which she thinks will be just fine. Scherer thinks Warren does not want to endorse Bernie but rather wants to put a lot of pressure on HRC in terms of policy. Warren sees HRC as the best possible future but is skeptical as to whether HRC will break ties with financial institutions. Cannot be sure if Warren will support HRC if she doesn't do what Warren wants. Jess McIntosh points to HRC raising a record amount from grassroots donors as indication that not all of the energy is behind Bernie Sanders. Scherer agrees that HRC will be the nominee as long as nothing horrible happens but says that HRC's rhetoric is very finely tuned to where the energy is in the party with Warren. Says the party is very populist at this moment. The Last Word with Lawrence O'Donnell . 2015 07 09,Hillary Clinton;Bernie Sanders,Commentary,National,Role of Elizabeth Warren.mp4

John,

I got your information from my friend Jeff Brewer, whom I believe you had dinner with last night. I wanted to follow up with you while the topic is still fresh on your mind.

I am producing Carol Channing's 95th Birthday at the McCallum Theatre in Palm Desert, CA on March 5, 2016. This will be a celebration filled with performances by Kristin Chenoweth, Alan Cumming, Chita Rivera, Lily Tomlin and many more. Throughout the evening, we will be showing video greetings from several esteemed celebrities sending Carol birthday wishes. Carol is a unique performer in that she has been invited to perform at the White House for every U.S. President since Kennedy. We are in the process of compiling video greetings from all the former Presidential couples and we would love to have one from the Clintons.

I have already been in contact with Reed Hauser at the Clinton Foundation. He thought it might be difficult to get a moment with both Clintons at the same time due to their rigorous campaigning schedules. Whatever you can do would be tremendously appreciated. You only turn 95 once, right?

Here's a link to the official announcement about the show on Playbill. I'm also attaching a sample video from Barbara Walters to give you an idea of what I'm looking for.

Nancy: Here's another idea of mine. Would you be willing to send this to John Podesta, or anyone else you think might help. This is not only important but timely and time sensitive.

The solution I'm proposing is one that worked during the Kennedy administration and can work again. Although the paper may contain too long a wind up, essentially what I propose is that the assistance package include a provision that would permit a panel of three labor arbitrators to modify the Big Threes legacy collective bargaining agreements IF the panel finds "the balance of the equities clearly favors modification of such agreement[s]." This is a standard similar to that used by bankruptcy courts in rejecting labor agreements. But here bankruptcy would be avoided (very important in order not to spook consumers) and the decision would be made by three labor arbitrators who would not only have more experience in labor management relations than would a bankruptcy judge but also they would likely be more sympathetic to the union than would many on the federal bench. So, while I wouldn't expect the UAW to jump up and down with glee, upon reflection the UAW should like this better than the alternatives—bankruptcy for GM (and Chrysler) before January 20th or no assistance before January 20th.

I hope you like this. In the early 60s I actually made the proposal to the Kennedy Administration (I was working at the Department of Commerce at the time) that ultimately resulted in the legislation that created the three person panel that resolved the fireman dispute. It would be nice to have a reprise at the outset of the Obama Administration. Thanks. Jim

Subject:	Revised Total Compensation Philosophy

To All:

As a follow up to our call today, below please find the revised total compensation philosophy draft with the 2 changes highlighted. Please let me know your comments by COB if you can. Thanks.

Terry

Proposed Parameters for the Foundation's Total Compensation Philosophy

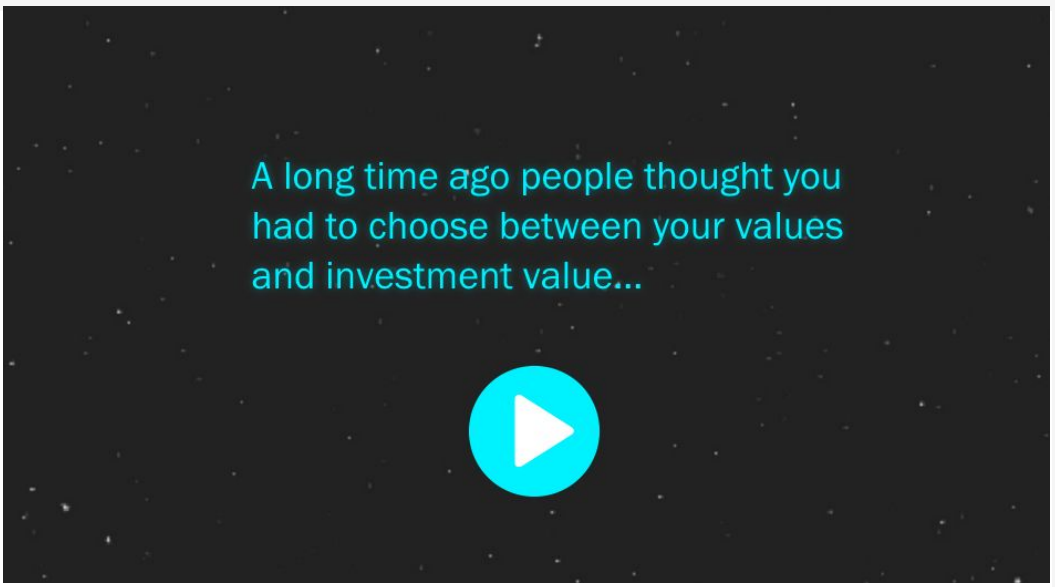

A total compensation philosophy lays out the guiding principles for our compensation and benefits policies. It serves as a type of mission statement for our policies and practices. The proposed parameters for the Foundation's total compensation philosophy are:

- We aspire to a compensation program with standards that promote consistency and fair treatment of employees throughout the Foundation.
- To encourage a true meritocracy, the goal of our pay practices should be pay-for-performance. Length of service would also be a factor in determining pay, but of lesser consideration. Pay-for-performance is a pay strategy where the employee evaluation has significant influence on the amount of his/her pay increases or bonuses. This means that outstanding performers will receive the greatest rewards, to acknowledge their superior contributions and to motivate them to continue high performance; average performers will receive smaller raises, which may encourage them to work harder to achieve larger raises in the future; and poor performers will receive no increase, which is intended to persuade them to improve their performance or leave.
- Our competitive group should consist of not-for-profit organizations.
- The level of total compensation (i.e., salary and benefits) we offer relative to organizations with which we compete for talent should be, on average for the entire organization, at the midpoint. This means that based on a number of factors including performance, time in position, background and skills, some employees' salaries will be below the midpoint and some employees' salaries will be above the midpoint, but the average for all employees should be around the midpoint.
- We should continue using the annual year-end process for compensation decisions and only allow mid-year increases for promotions that occur during the year.
- Employee compensation and increases in compensation are subject to available funds and the financial impact on the organization. Therefore, any steps to bring an employee's compensation up to market pay should not only be based on the employee's performance, time in position, and background, but also on the ability of the Foundation to manage its total compensation expense. As a result, for the purpose of good fiscal management and discipline, an employee's compensation that is significantly below the market may be addressed over a few years' period.

Subject:	A dress for Hillary Clinton by Michaela Jedinak as Tina Brown, Arianna Huffington ...

Hello John Podesta,

Can you help me? And put me in touch with Hillary Clinton's Image team?

My name is Michaela Jedinak and I am fashion entrepreneur and dress designer who designs power dresses for senior business women. www.michaelajedinak.com.

I am a big fan of Hillary Clinton and I would like to dress her with some of my power dresses. I like to do my part to get her elected by dressing her in strong and feminine dresses that underlines her leadership personality. www.michaelajedinak.com

We sell our dresses only online or by appointment in London. All of my dresses are made to order in our London studio within 5-7 working days and are made out of luxurious Italian fabric.

I was chosen as as an inspiration and role model by the Women Business Council run by Government Equality Office: http://womensbusinesscouncil.dcms.gov.uk/role-models/michaela-jedinak-joy-of-clothes/

I am designing dresses with women's body shape in mind and challenging traditional retailers with my design concept. While many designers create dresses for one idealised body shape, I appreciate the diversity in body shapes. Dresses that women can rely on 100%throughout the day, that allow them to move with ease and which make them feel confident, comfortable and reinforce their performance.

My dresses have been worn by many leading business ladies e.g. Tina Brown, Arianna Huffington and they have been featured in the New York Times, Times, Wall Street Journal, BLOOMBERG, Harper's Bazaar, The Telegraph, Grazia, INSTYLE, Irish Times, TATLER, Grazia DE, and appearing on BBC News Night, SKY Sunrise, SKY Sports, NewYork Times, ITV , CNBC , German TAGESSCHAU, US TV series SCANDAL. My dresses have been seen as well at Downing Street, House of Lords and been worn by European Royalty and Aristocracy.

now I think we should do this right after Super Tuesday.

[WHAT IS BASIS FOR ASSUMPTION THEY WANT OR MUST COME ON ANY CAMPAIGN CREATED - THERE IS NOTHING TO STOP THEM FROM DOING WHAT THEY DO INDEPENDENTLY IF THEY CHOSE AND A CAMPAIGN WOULD NOT BE IN A POSITION TO ALTER THAT AS THEY ARE INDEPENDENT] It has the potential to create some big up front complications to an already difficult process. My two cents: if any one is in a position to tell Craig to put the breaks on this, they should.[LOOK FORWARD TO TALKING LATER TODAY]

Subject: Between you and me

They're all looking at us — seeing if we can handle the pressure.

The press and political pundits looooove financial reports — because it gives them an opportunity to determine the strengths (or weaknesses) of a campaign. And next weekend, we submit our first report of 2013 — it's our biggest test yet.

We already know that Cuccinelli received $1.5 million from the radical anti-choice group, Susan B. Anthony List. And you can be sure they won't be the only right wing group featured on his report.

I need to raise $50,000 before the deadline in order to keep pace. Will you pitch in $5 before it's too late?

In 2012, Super PACs and Tea Party groups had to split their money between the Presidential election and dozens of close Senate and Congressional races.

But this year, we're the only game in town.

That means Karl Rove and all of his billionaire Tea Party pals are doing everything they can to beat me.

Will you donate $5 today and help me fight back?

https://donate.terrymcauliffe.com/help-terry-fight-back

Last year, we showed the world that Super PAC spending can't drown out a true grassroots movement.

Let's prove that it wasn't a fluke. Let's make a statement in back-to-back years.

Thanks for your help,
Terry

Thx again for checking with us.

No concerns w/ John talking about having reached agreement much sooner than the two parties have traditionally been able to in past transitions. Only thought is that we may want to focus on the concept rather than the actual document/memo -- eg, agreement on a process to govern the contact between the president-elect's team and the Admin at depts/ agencies.

Given the MOU's eventually wide distro, we fully expect it will get out, or at least its existence is likely to become known, at some point. Nevertheless, for now focusing on the agreement rather than calling attention to the document might be the most prudent course.

Make sense?

Of course, that will trigger the inevitable press request to see it. Would either the disclosure of the MOU or the subsequent release of it be problematic from your standpoint?

Subject:	[AGENDA & MATERIALS] Call to Discuss Taxes and Health Strategy

All—below please find the agenda for tonight's 9:30 PM call along with background from Tony that we would like folks to read ahead of tonight's conversation. Thanks!

AGENDA

1. Taxes
   - 2008-2013 need to be released; 2014 won't be ready
   - What information do we need in advance?

2. Health
   - What exactly do we want in a summary
   - How do we want to set expectations?

3. Timing of official disclosure form in relation to official launch

1) In addition to the precedence on tax returns, I want to highlight comments WJC and HRC have said.

- President Clinton Argued Romney Should Release His Tax Returns. According to Newsmax, "So what explains Romney's reluctance in Clinton's eyes? 'I have no idea, but whatever it is it couldn't be as bad as not doing it,' he said. 'I mean in his first tax return, the one year he did release, all of his income was taxed at a 15 percent capital gain [rate]. But he can honestly say he didn't draw a salary. He was running for president, so all of his income was investment income. That was the law, whether people like it or not. He fully complied with the law.'" [Newsmax, 7/20/12]

- President Clinton Called It a "Mistake" for Romney to Not Release His Tax Returns, Said It Shows "He Thinks It Should Be a Different Set of Rules for Him and Everybody Else." According to CNN, "Meanwhile, Clinton argued Thursday that Romney's ongoing resistance is a "mistake" and hurting his image. 'With everyone else being so much more forthcoming, it raises the question of whether he thinks it should be a different set of rules for him and everybody else,' Clinton said. 'And that's a problem for him.'" [CNN, 7/20/12]

- President Clinton Claimed It Is "Typical" for a Candidate to Release 10,11 Years of Tax Returns. According to Politifact, "Former President Bill Clinton said the usual standard is much higher. 'You know, it's typical, I think, that we all release 10, 11 years,' Clinton said on NBC's Today Show on July 13. 'I think Sen. McCain released over 20 years of tax returns.'" [Politifact, 8/1/12]

…Politifact: Clinton "Way Off" about McCain. According to Politifact, "We should note here that Clinton was way off when he said McCain released 20 years of returns; McCain only released two. Similarly, Romney has said that Kerry released only two years of returns when Kerry had released many more than that." [Politifact, 8/1/12]

- Clinton Campaign Called on Lazio to Release Tax Returns in 2000. In August 2000, AFP reported, "Aides to First Lady Hillary Clinton's Senate campaign on Friday continued to press her Republican rival, Representative Rick Lazio, to release his income tax returns, an issue New York voters have taken seriously in recent elections. US Representative Rick Lazio, who represents New York, has repeatedly promised since last May to release his tax return records but has yet to do so. Clinton campaign spokesman Howard Wolfson on Friday urged the Lazio campaign to 'release eight years of tax returns for the eight years he has been in Congress.'" [AFP, 8/18/00]

2) The Clintons have released their taxes back to the 1970s. But Bush has also typically released his returns. You will see that many have released the full returns (as the Clintons have typically done as well). Jeff Gerth is hung up on the fact that they only released a summary of their 2007 taxes and not the entire return, so I bet that becomes an issue if the decision is made only to release the years at DOS. In addition, they are on the record calling for other candidates to release their taxes.

3) On health records, it appears a lot of candidates release letters. However, I would urge folks to look at McCain and Biden, given that is the standard HRC will probably be compared to.

Dan,
Here's my suggestion: Let's just give her the short one first – which is what I think she really wants, and more importantly needs, for now.

We can spend a little more time on this but I really think short is going to be better on this first foray. Goal her should be for her to internalize and we can do issue add-ons.

Try this edit of Dan's last version, stripped down, with Joel's line added:

•Americans have fought their way back from tough economic times. But the deck is still stacked for those at the top. It's not right that corporate profits are the highest they've been in decades but paychecks for everyday Americans are at the lowest. CEOs should not earn 300 times more than a typical American worker. And it makes no sense that it's so easy for a big corporation to get a tax break but so hard for a small business to get a loan.

•I'm running for President because everyday Americans and their families need a champion and I want to be that champion. Here are the big fights that I'll take on:

1.First, we need to build an economy for tomorrow not yesterday. I want to make being middle class mean something again in this country. When American families get ahead, America moves forward too,

2.Second, we need to make sure every American has the opportunity to reach their God-given potential, regardless of who they are, where they were born, or who they love.

3.Third, we need to fix our political system that is crippled by gridlock and dysfunction.

4.And fourth, we need to protect our country from the very real dangers we face from around the world.

• I know none of this is going to be easy. We face some pretty powerful forces. But I've spent my whole life fighting for children, for families, standing up for America. And I think people know...I don't quit.

•For me, it isn't enough for American families just to get by, you deserve to get ahead and stay ahead. It's your time.

I think the use of questions as a device in the opening weakens it. Strong direct statements carry power that questions typically don't

My second goes to a point Mandy made yesterday which this feels more like its verging on a mini speech as opposed to a tough tight riff that echoes the rationale but emphasizes the direct articulation of the fights and a single simple policy or definition of problem in a way the clearly suggests the problem.

I guess this would be about 7 minutes if she delivered the whole thing and that feels long to me if she's sitting around a table or gets asked by reporters.

Dan,c can you tack a crack at tightening a bit this morning?
I'm on an early flight and should land in NYC by 8:15 and I'll touch base then.

Here's an attempt at merging the home base with the four fights, a little fleshed out. I think Joel is onto something with making her second bullet into God-given potential, but would give it more of the family/ community/social fabric flavor she talked about.

Attire: Business

This event was scheduled as a follow-up to YOUR remarks at the New School on July 13 about the on demand economy. Many in the technology community embraced YOUR comments and acknowledged that the rise of new technologies raises important questions about workplace protections, but some in the community interpreted them as challenging the promise of the on-demand economy. This roundtable, with a small but influential set of tech executives, was organized to foster deeper relationships with leaders in the community and reinforce that YOU are the candidate of the future – supportive of the opportunities the on-demand economy offers and, more broadly, focused on embracing and accelerating, rather than impeding, the kinds of innovation that will drive the economy of the future. Accordingly, the attendees have been selected with an eye toward fostering a positive atmosphere. Not everyone in the room will be a partisan Democrat, and some may wish to make their case for why on-demand economy companies do not compromise workers' rights, but all intend to participate constructively and should be open to your message.

Munchery, Inc.

Munchery, Inc., was founded in 2011 by Tri Tran. A former software engineer and father of two, he came up for the idea of Munchery after he consistently found it difficult to find time to cook healthy meals for his family during the work week. Munchery is an end-to-end restaurant-quality meal provider that specializes in delivery. Using Munchery's app or website, customers can order from a daily changing menu and have meals delivered to their home at a specified time. Munchery classifies its chefs and delivery drivers as employees, not contractors. As part of its corporate strategy, Munchery buys food locally, offsets its carbon footprint, uses only biodegradable supplies, and donates portions of its proceeds to food banks. Munchery launched in San Francisco and now operates in San Francisco, Seattle, New York and Los Angeles.

What I heard from Hillary about the sharing economy

Stephanie Hannon, Chief Technology Officer for Hillary for America
July 13, 2015

As a Silicon Valley technologist transplanted to the campaign world, I care deeply about structures and support for innovation. I've seen first-hand the way in which technology is bringing positive change into our communities.

Technology has transformed the way we communicate, we travel, we exercise, we date, we shop, we learn, we get jobs. Sharing economy firms are disrupting traditional industries for the better across the globe. One of the many reasons I upended my life to join Hillary's team is that, as Senator and Secretary of State, she had a proven record of using technology as a means of harnessing change both in our country and around the world. She gets it.

Hillary said in a speech at the New School today:

"Meanwhile, many Americans are making extra money renting out a spare room, designing websites, selling products they design themselves at home, or even driving their own car. This 'on demand' or so-called 'gig economy' is creating exciting opportunities and unleashing innovation, but it's also raising hard questions about workplace protections and what a good job will look like in the future."

I've been surprised to see these common-sense comments get misrepresented as an attack on the sharing economy. As Hillary mentioned, the sharing economy is creating exciting new opportunities that are helping Americans work more flexible hours and earn a little bit of extra cash by renting out a spare room, selling products they design themselves, or even driving their own car. From veterans re-entering the workforce, to families trying to supplement their household incomes, to ordinary people recovering from losing their job or working around busy schedules, countless Americans are benefiting from these innovations and helping drive the economy forward. That's something we can be proud of.

And as we navigate uncharted seas in this new economy, Hillary wants to guarantee that all workers are being protected and rewarded for their hard work. She's not calling out specific sectors, or any one company, but is addressing an economy-wide problem that has existed for years. We've seen some employers take advantage of vulnerable workers in industries like construction, janitorial services, agriculture, and even home healthcare. Hillary's remarks today challenge us all to think about the future of work in America. She's calling on all sectors to do better: to ensure that no employees are exploited and to ensure that all workers are rewarded for their work. The vast majority of my colleagues in the technology community support these goals. It's essential that we talk about how to do that right.

In her speech, Hillary challenged all of us to think about how we enforce today's laws that allow the middle class to access good jobs today, while building new rules of the road for the future economy. It's a matter of approaching the future smartly, a future that does not fit neatly into our existing laws built for a different workplace and a different economy.

As the campaign unfolds, the tech community will continue to see that Hillary is fighting to defend the issues that matter most to them. From calling for comprehensive immigration reform to addressing climate change and defending marriage equality, Hillary is fighting to improve lives and our economy, which is the core goal of the technology industry I love. The Republicans who are attacking Hillary's speech today have the opposite agenda—very few technologists I know stand with them.

We are a community rooted in facts and diligence. She is pro-jobs and pro-innovation. Please read the speech and make up your own mind.

I mean this to be constructive. I think you have done a great job under impossible circunstances, but I have concerns about the memo. I think it understates the problem between CDA/FFA. What is the strategy going forward? Fine to say how committed and wonderful Harold and Ellen were, but what are we supposed to do with that? If the implication is that if only I would spend 75% of my time travelling for FFA, that's unrealistic. So what do we do?

John,

I know it's easy to focus on the circus in the Republican presidential field, but the Senate is up for grabs in 2016, and we have a real chance to pick up a seat that the GOP has held for a long time.

My friend Ann Kirkpatrick is running to be the next senator from Arizona, and polls have her in a dead heat. She's running a strong campaign, and proving all the pundits wrong. She has already erased the six-point lead her opponent held in the last poll.

Ann is a selfless public servant, and her candidacy is an important part of our efforts to retake the Senate. Help Ann and her team push through to the finish line by making a $5 contribution.

My favorite poll numbers from the race aren't about how Arizona Democrats are flocking to Ann -- it's how well she's doing among independents and Republicans. Right now, polls show Ann winning a full 25% of Republican voters, and her field team is looking to extend her lead among Latinos, rural voters, and younger voters.

Ann has the momentum on her side, and she needs to capitalize on it. Give Ann and her organizers the resources they need by contributing $5, $10, or more if you're able.

Thanks for supporting my friend Ann. With your help, we'll have more good news to share from Arizona soon.

Sincerely,

Harry Reid

Two flags:

This line seems to equate going to an HBCU with needing help the most - it jumped out at me when I read it. I don't think we should conflate the two.

2) "We have to break down all the barriers, and that includes those that stand in the way of people of color sharing fully in the promise of America. Because the truth is, more than half a century after Rosa Parks sat, Dr. King marched, and John Lewis bled, race still plays a significant role in determining who gets ahead in America and who gets left behind.

Here in Cleveland you know this all too well. We wept with you when Tamir [Ta-meer] Rice was shot. He should be alive today. He should be healthy and happy and dreaming about the future.

Too many other children here are growing up in poverty. And more than 14 percent of Cleveland kids have been exposed to dangerous levels of lead – that's even more than in Flint."

I'm probably being hypersensitive here but when I read this it almost felt like we were transitioning from talking about race to talking about poverty too quickly - could be criticized for doing just what we are knocking Bernie for.

And, as Hillary warned in her book, Hard Choices, we shouldn't be giving special rights to corporations at the expense of workers and consumers. Getting these things right will go a long way toward ensuring that trade will be a net plus for everyday Americans.

U.S. PIRG's Ed Mierzwinski kicks off series with entry on financial reform legislation

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7 – The U.S. Public Interest Research Group (U.S. PIRG) launched its new, regular Huffington Post blog column, In the Public Interest, on Monday with an entry from Ed Mierzwinski, the organization's veteran Consumer Program Director.

In Monday's column, Mierzwinski writes about "four key tests" facing the House of Representatives this week, as they consider the Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2009.

"In my 20 years in Washington, I've witnessed the deregulation of the financial marketplace and the ruin that goes along with it," Mierzwinski writes. "I am determined not to let it happen again."

Subject:	Who the hell is Bob Vernon...

John-- I'm hoping that when you ask Beth Nolan who the hell Bob Vernon is she'll at least agree that we were always intellectual equals. She was always the better, more disciplined student, and I was the one more comfortable pushing the creative boundaries (of everything).
And because you know Beth to be a serious person of substance, I hope you'll appreciate that I don't approach you without a serious purpose as well. Here is a link to a proposal for something I call ATAWS. Advanced Tactical Anti-Insurgency Weapons System. https://www.dropbox.com/s/s5mccif8kof3ndv/ATAWS%20Summary%203.27.15.pdf?dl=0
I wish I had access to those in the White House or NSC, but I don't. And I don't have the means to have anyone within the defense/intelligence community review the proposal or act on it if it has merit. But I know that you do. Maybe not now, given your current focus, although now is when it should be considered, and if worthwhile, now is when it should be developed and deployed.
I strongly suspect that Mrs. Clinton will succeed in her campaign for the presidency this time around, and if she does she will be in a position to act on this proposal. That's another reason I wanted to put it in your hands.
I cannot pretend to be certain that ATAWS is without flaws (either in concept or with respect to potential obstacles to its development). But I am convinced that this approach is the next logical step in batlefield application of UAV technology, and that our need for this technology is urgent within the context of our tactical warfighting effort against adversaries such as ISIS.
As you will see, it is almost 100% off-the-shelf technology, and I would be happy to answer any questions you may have regarding any aspect of this proposal.
Sincerely,
Bob
P.S. I included projected costs of developing ATAWS, but make no mistake, John, I am NOT seeking a contract! I have neither the experience nor the skills needed to manage such a project. I just wanted to point out the low cost.

McCain Aide Calls For Fully Funded No Child Left Behind, Which McCain Voted Against

Appearing on Meet the Press Sunday, John McCain's senior adviser Carly Fiorina touted the Senator's bona fides on education by laying out the reforms he had envisioned for the No Child Left Behind act.

"He believes that No Child Left Behind was an imperfect piece of legislation," she said . "Nevertheless, there are things about it that have worked. We need to learn the lessons, fix the problems, fully fund it, and continue to focus on the education of our children as well as the education and training of our displaced workers."

But if full funding for NCLB is what Fiorina is looking for, she can start by lecturing her current boss. Despite hailing the legislation as a major milestone, McCain has consistently (though not always) voted against providing complete funding for the education legislation. According to the National Education Association , "Since 2003, McCain voted repeatedly against fully funding No Child Left Behind, resulting in an unfunded mandate that has continued to further tap local communities and states during an economic downturn."

The lost-in-the-news-cycle gaffe for Fiorina puts a exclamation point on what was, undoubtedly, a tough week. First she touted health insurance plans that covered birth control in addition to Viagra, leading to a completely awkward exchange for her boss with a reporter (not to mention the embarrassing revelation that in 2003, McCain had voted against an amendment requiring insurance coverage of prescription birth control).

Then she mentioned, in an interview with Bloomberg's Al Hunt, that McCain would be open to raising taxes on the wealthy, if in a creative enough fashion - a position sure to incur the wrath of anti-tax conservatives.

TURKEY TWEET DU JOUR -- @FrankLuntz:"38% of Republicans disapprove of Obama's executive action to pardon 2 Thanksgiving turkeys" http://bit.ly/1XsfBTT

Excerpt from the poll (by a well-known Republican pollster):

The examples of the GOP's reflexive opposition to President Obama's agenda are many but this may be the best one yet: by a 27 point margin Republicans say they disapprove of the President's executive order last year pardoning two Thanksgiving turkeys (Macaroni and Cheese) instead of the customary one. Only 11% of Republicans support the President's executive order last year to 38% who are opposed- that's a pretty clear sign that if you put Obama's name on something GOP voters are going to oppose it pretty much no matter what. Overall there's 35/22 support for the pardon of Macaroni and Cheese thanks to 59/11 support from Democrats and 28/21 from independents.

Subject: MUST READ: Howard Dean Endorses Hillary

Politico: Howard Dean: "I'm Ready for Hillary"

By Howard Dean

December 10, 2014

Hillary Clinton is by far the most qualified person in the United States to serve as President. If she runs, I will support her. I have known Hillary for almost twenty-five years. We first met when I was the governor of Vermont and she was the First Lady, giving us the opportunity to work together in various capacities, particularly on expanding health care access. During those years, I have learned that she is one of the most conscientious and competent people I have ever met. She has an enormous capacity to analyze and solve problems. She has a work ethic that drives her to persist until the job is done and done right. And she has a record in the Senate of successfully working with both sides of our very combative political spectrum in order to accomplish goals that improve the lives of ordinary Americans

One of the most important reasons I am supporting her is because Secretary Clinton understands the institutional requirements of the Supreme Court. More than 73 percent of Americans think the Supreme Court is no longer a fair arbitrator and is influenced by political considerations. I am one of those 73 percent. This Court has repeatedly made decisions that have harmed our country for the sake of extending a political and ideological agenda that is far outside the mainstream of American traditions—on issues like campaign finance, voting rights, the rights of women, and religious freedom.

America needs a thoughtful President who will appoint judges and justices who will stand up for the Constitution and the law instead of catering to the dictates of those who fund the right-wing Federalist Society. I am confident that Hillary Clinton will provide that leadership.

As secretary of state, Hillary Clinton built up a strong record of working effectively with our partners and allies to deal with challenges to global peace. In her four years as Secretary of State, she traveled nearly a million miles and visited with foreign leaders in 112 countries to address common problems from terrorism to overcoming the oppression of women to global warming. She has the experience and knowledge required to protect American national security in a time of new challenges that threaten peace and prosperity, including the menace that is ISIL. Secretary Clinton's work serving President Obama has earned the respect of any thinking American—including Republicans—both inside the Beltway and around the country.

Finally, although the statistics suggest the economy is improving, over 60% of Americans aren't feeling good about their own situation. Nearly all of the gains in the past fifteen years have bypassed the vast majority of Americans, while the holdings of the top 20% have increased dramatically. This is a fundamental disparity that will be the greatest challenge our next President must tackle—how to reestablish a commitment to all of us to restore the opportunity to live and achieve the American Dream.

Hillary Clinton will not shrink from this challenge. In the coming months, I expect her to lay out her plans to attack income inequality and help rebuild the middle class. She knows how to sell a broad range of Americans on these policies, and has shown how to stand up against extremist economic policies.

America needs a President who will focus on the next hundred years, not one who hopes to turn the clock back by a hundred years. I am sure I will have disagreements with her as she focuses on getting Americans back to work and rebuilding an America that works for all of us. I value and respect her enough that whatever differences may exist will be minimal compared to the tasks we really need to do for the good of restoring our country. We need a mature, seasoned, thoughtful leader at a time when maturity and thoughtfulness are increasingly rare commodities in Washington, D.C.

If I have the opportunity, I will cast my vote for Hillary Clinton for President.

Subject:	Major Land Deal in Montana and Washington

Dear John,

I thought you might be interested in a major land deal The Nature Conservancy just announced.

Yesterday, we announced a $134 million, 165,000-acre conservation project in Washington's Central Cascade Mountains and Montana's Blackfoot River Valley. One of the largest land deals ever undertaken by TNC, the project secures some of the most important wildlife habitat on the continent, connects vast wilderness areas and protects sources of clean water for people and nature.

The project builds on years of work by TNC and partners to consolidate vast stretches of western land that are broken into a checkerboard pattern of public and private ownership. We look forward to formally closing this deal in the next few months and working with local communities to develop a shared vision for the future of these lands.

For more details on the project, please see the below press release. Additional information, including maps , a slide show , a video and factsheets, is also posted on nature.org .

Thank you as always for your leadership and support of conservation. If you have any questions or if there is anything else I can do for you, please let me know.

Best regards,
Mark

Nature Conservancy Announces Major Land Purchase to Promote Water Quality, Wildlife Habitat and Outdoor Recreation in Two Western States

257 Square-Mile Project Will Unite Checkerboard Ownership Patterns in Key Areas of Montana and Washington

MISSOULA, MT & CLE ELUM, WA — October 27, 2014 - The Nature Conservancy today announced a $134 million conservation project that will preserve recreational access and help conserve the ecological integrity of 165,073 acres – 257 square miles – of forests, rivers and wildlife habitat in the Cascade Mountain Range of Washington and in the Blackfoot River Valley in Montana.

The Conservancy is acquiring the lands from Plum Creek, including 47,921 acres in the Yakima River Headwaters in Washington and 117,152 acres in the Lower Blackfoot River Watershed in Montana.

"This project will secure some of the most important wildlife habitat on the continent," said Mark R. Tercek, president and CEO of The Nature Conservancy. "These lands serve as critical linkages between vast wilderness areas and will protect sources of clean water for people and nature. We are excited about the opportunity to work with local communities to develop a shared vision for the future of these forests and rivers."

In the months ahead, the Conservancy in both states will actively engage with local partners to identify the best possible permanent outcomes for these lands. Options include, in some cases, transfer to public ownership or private ownership with conservation easements. The Conservancy's management focus during the time it manages the lands will be on forest restoration to enhance wildlife habitat and to protect water quality.

This transaction is one of the largest land acquisition projects ever undertaken by the Conservancy.

Dubbed The Great Western Checkerboards Project, this collaborative project seeks to conserve lands granted in 1862 by Congress to the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads. Through an act of Congress, every other section (one square mile) of land within 10-40 miles of a proposed railroad right-of-way was granted to the railroad company while the federal government retained the neighboring sections.

As a result of this history, there are vast stretches of western land that are broken into a checkerboard pattern of public and private ownership. This makes the management of the intermingled public land more difficult and costly.

The Great Western Checkerboards Project builds on years of work by many organizations, individuals and government agencies to consolidate the largest remaining checkerboards in Washington's Cascades Range and the Crown of the Continent area of Montana, a 10-million-acre landscape that envelops Glacier National Park.

In Washington, the lands the Conservancy is acquiring stretch for nearly 25 miles along either side of I-90 east of Snoqualmie Pass, just a little over an hour's drive from Seattle. They connect federal and state wilderness areas and encompass the headwaters of the Yakima River, one of the most important salmon and steelhead rivers in the state. The Cascade forests span rugged and beautiful country, home to elk, wolves, spotted owls and other raptors. People across the region prize these forests for outdoor recreation.

"Today's transaction creates an opportunity to open community dialog around the future for these 48,000 acres of prized lands—to connect and secure important wildlife habitat that is becoming all too scarce, to continue to protect clean water in rivers and lakes right along the I-90 corridor, and to create a place where people can enjoy fishing, hunting and hiking," said Mike Stevens, the Conservancy's Washington state director.

The Montana portion of this project conserves 117,000 acres of ecologically important lands in the state's storied Blackfoot River Valley, a place known for its vast forests, blue ribbon trout rivers and multi-generation family ranches. The conservation of these new lands builds on the historic achievement of the Montana Legacy Project, which in 2008 conserved and re-connected more than 310,000 acres within the Crown of the Continent. The Crown is a magnificent, 10-million acre natural system that has not seen a plant or animal go extinct during recorded history and whose waters feed rivers that flow across the continent into three different seas. Over the years, the Conservancy has worked with Plum Creek in this area to secure key lands for conservation.

The Montana lands being acquired are among the largest and most ecologically important tracts of private land in the Crown of the Continent. The project will ensure that the Crown's grand mosaic will be conserved, securing this place as a hub for wide-ranging wildlife, such as grizzly bears, lynx, and wolves -- whose survival depends on the ability to move, unobstructed, across hundreds of miles of wild lands in Montana, Idaho, and into Canada. These lands and waters create an outdoor playground that's been popular with Montanans and visitors from around the world for generations, and which serves as an economic base for many of the surrounding rural communities.

"We're excited about working with all of our partners to balance the tremendous natural and community values of this land," said Richard Jeo, state director of The Nature Conservancy in Montana. "With their input and our science and stewardship, we can create a future for these lands that contributes to the extraordinary quality of life that defines Montana."

John, Happy New Year! It has been a crazy year already for us... Debate and have been living at a hotel for the past week because our house is still not ready.

Will you be in Charleston next week? If so can we grab coffee and chat? Would love to talk shop and thoughts on DNC, etc.

All the best,

Hi John,

I hope you are doing well. It's been a little while since we were both at CAP, but I just wanted to drop you a note and let you know that I am interested in pursuing an opportunity to work on Hillary's campaign. I have an open mind as far as positions and teams go, but ideally it would be comms/digital.

I've attached my resume for your reference. I'd love the opportunity to speak with a member of the team. Please let me know if there is any additional information I can provide.

Best,
Emily Seldin

Great spending the evening with you last night.

The meeting was so good. Great to see old friends from '08. It certainly inspires us to go home to keep working more and more and get the job done!

Below is an accurate article about John kasich which I mentioned at dinner.

Keep on cooking!

Hi everybody – here's the revised draft for tomorrow. Compared to the draft you saw last night: 1.) It's a lot shorter. 2.) I've more directly connected the Urban League agenda with her record at the top. 3.) I've imposed a three-point organization to make it more orderly. 4.) I've added the hit on Jeb that we discussed this morning. (I've also pasted it below.) It's pretty great.

She's speaking early in the morning so if you have any edits please send them asap.

Thanks for everything!

I'm glad that so many presidential candidates are here today. It's a signal that the work you've been doing for decades is getting the political attention it deserves. But the real test of a candidate's commitment is not whether we come to speak at your national conference, as important as that is. It's whether we're still around after the cameras are gone and the votes are counted. It's whether our positions live up to our rhetoric.

And too often we see a mismatch between what some candidates say in venues like this, and what they plan to actually do if they're elected.

I don't think you can credibly say that everyone has a "right to rise" – and then say you're for phasing out Medicare, or for repealing Obamacare. People can't rise if they can't afford health care. They can't rise if the minimum wage is too low to live on.

And you can't seriously talk about the right to rise… and support laws that deny the right to vote.

What people say matters – but what they do matters more. And Americans deserve leaders who'll face inequity head on, in all its complexity – who won't just concede that there are barriers holding people back, but who'll do what it takes to tear those barriers down, once and for all.

> As states review EPA's groundbreaking Clean Power Plan proposal, many seem to be focused on comparing their targets to other states' and on getting "credit" for things they have already done, rather than on developing a plan to achieve their targets.

A HUGE WIN FOR FORESTS AND OUR CLIMATE!

On Saturday, August 16th, in the Nokia Theatre in Los Angeles Calif., "The Years of Living Dangerously" team won the 2014 Emmy Award for Outstanding Documentary or Nonfiction Series.

One could not imagine a more glamorous/exciting/thrilling occasion leading up to this landmark moment…a climate change program winning U.S. television's biggest award!

I am deeply honored to have been a part of this production. Major kudos to founding Executive Producers David Gelber and Joel Bach for their vision to create a television series that brings climate change “up close and personal”. My sincere thanks to Solly Granatstein, the brilliant lead producer of our deforestation story "The Last Stand”, (Episodes 1&2). And of course, A HUGE THANK YOU to Harrison Ford for encouraging us with his passion to protect tropical forests. Harrison’s emotional connection to nature was an inspiration to all of us!

Join us in viewing The Creative Arts Emmy Awards, airing Sunday Aug 24th at 8pm ET/PT on Fox Movie Channel (FXM). The Primetime Emmy Awards ceremony will air live on NBC, Monday Aug 25th at 8pm ET / 5pm PT ... So please tune in!

Subject:	Honoring Frances

Dear John,
The League of Conservation Voters is thrilled to be honoring our mutual friend Frances Beinecke with the Lifetime Achievement Award at our annual New York Dinner on Monday, December 1st. I hope you will be able to join us for this special gathering as we celebrate Frances for her years of leadership in the environmental movement. I am reaching out to some of her closest colleagues and friends to ask if you could share a few words to express your gratitude and what Frances' leadership has meant to you. We will be sharing these tributes in our printed dinner program and as part of the award presentation. So that we may include as many tributes as possible, please be mindful to keep your praises to a few sentences (about 150 words). Our deadline to include tributes in our printed program is Wednesday, November 19.

If you have any questions about the program or would like to attend the dinner. Please contact Katie Buongiorno at Katie_Buongiorno@lcv.org or (202)454-4583.

Cheers,
Gene

Candidates ask a lot from people, but for a good reason. It takes a lot of resources to run a campaign and get your message out to voters. This week it was my turn to ask for your help, and I cannot thank you enough for taking the time to look at my introductory message, forwarding my notes to your friends, following me on social media , and last but not least, for investing in my campaign.

We have a long road ahead, but I know that we can do this together. Again, I thank you and cannot wait to hear your feedback, your stories, and your input as we meet on the campaign trail and work together to build a brighter future!

HuffPost: The Obama Test: Personnel is Policy

By Thomas B. Edsall

Forget the election. With November 4 just days away and Barack Obama positioned to become the nation's first African American president, the question has begun to turn to: Who gets what?

Does former South Dakota Senator and Majority Leader Tom Daschle have the inside track to become the White House chief of staff (COS), or maybe William Daley, Secretary of Commerce in the Clinton administration?

Obama campaign manager David Plouffe could seek the COS post himself, and he has a lot of chits outstanding. Sources say John Podesta, a former COS to President Clinton and head of Obama's transition team, has indicated he does not want to go back to the same job, but some think he could change his mind if pressed.

If Obama wants to pick a close personal friend and trusted adviser for the job, he may look to Valerie Jarrett, an African American mover-and-shaker in Chicago who, in 1991 while deputy chief of staff to Chicago Mayor Richard Daley, hired Michelle Robinson, Obama's wife-to-be.

The Chief of Staff choice may prove to be one of the most important Obama makes at a time when the country faces a severe economic crisis, and when newly enlarged Democratic majorities in the House and Senate will be pressing for approval of their special projects after eight years in the wilderness. President Clinton, who took office after 12 years of Republican administrations, picked a weak manager as his first chief of staff, Thomas F. "Mack" McLarty III, and many believe the choice contributed to Clinton's problematic first two years in office.

It's widely agreed that John Kerry would give up his Senate seat if offered Secretary of State, but does Obama want him? Kerry is keenly watching at least two potential competitors, Greg Craig, a top Obama foreign policy adviser, and Indiana Republican Senator Richard Lugar, who would bring bipartisanship to the Cabinet. Would Kerry take UN Ambassador? Richard Holbrooke is a possible, but not likely, choice at State, given the view inside the Obama camp that Holbrooke lost his shot in trying to persuade foreign policy types to sign up with Hillary instead of the Illinois Senator.

One source raised the question: "Is there a role for Tony Lake?" Lake put the Obama foreign policy team together but has said that his job ends on November 4, and that he wants nothing. Could Obama make him an offer --- like CIA director -- that he can't refuse? Lake was willing to take the job under Clinton, but withdrew in the face of Republican opposition in the Senate. Lake might also be tempted by the UN job, "although he has a second marriage and young kids."

Craig, Susan Rice, Samantha Power and a number of others are considered likely candidates for National Security Adviser. Craig and Rice have been speculated about for the UN.

Within days of winning, Obama is expected to announce his economic team. One theory is that he will try to calm the markets by appointing Larry Summers at Treasury, and Laura Tyson as his number two. Summers has a brilliant academic record and relevant experience, but he also has enemies, especially among women angered by his comments about female under-representation at the top levels of research science. Obama is known to be looking closely at Timothy F. Geithner, the respected president of the New York Fed, as another possibility for Treasury.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama has indicated that he will consider reappointing Henry Paulson at Treasury, but Paulson's performance has not been receiving high grades lately, diminishing this possibility.

The appointments Obama makes are not only the blood and guts of Washington gossip, but, more importantly, they are clear signals of the direction the new administration will take, reflecting the accuracy of the observation that "personnel is policy." For the Washington lobbying and special interest group community, appointments are crucial, determining success, access, and business.

A key test will be Secretary of Defense. Obama has indicated he is considering keeping Bush appointee Robert Gates. Such a move could signal that the new president wants Republican cover for a relatively quick troop withdrawal, or that he is acceding to pressure from generals on the ground to go slow on the promised pull-out. There are others on the Defense list, including Nebraska Republican Senator Chuck Hagel who would lend a bipartisan aura, and Thomas Pickering, a career foreign service officer who became Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs during the Clinton administration. Pickering, in the view of some Obama watchers, is a man of parts who, after making good money working for Boeing, could take over at the CIA, the National Security Agency, or become Director of National Intelligence.

Another man mentioned as a potential candidate in the Defense-National Security orbit is Richard Danzig, who served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Reserve Affairs and Logistics under President Carter, and as Secretary of the Navy under President Clinton. Danzig has also emerged more recently as a Middle East expert.

A 'Class A' Cabinet post, Attorney General, could go to Arizona Governor Janet Napolitano, or possibly to African American Obama adviser Eric Holder, or to Jamie Gorelick, considered a top-flight lawyer and a star at both the Pentagon and as Deputy Attorney General at Justice under Clinton. Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick has been mentioned as a possible AG, although sources in the state say that he has told them he wants to complete a first term and run for a second. Other AG possibles include Alabama Congressman Artur Davis and Chicago US Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald, who prosecuted the Scooter Libby CIA leak probe.

There has been talk that Napolitano could be picked as Secretary of Homeland Security, as there has been that former Indiana Congressman Tim Roemer, who sponsored legislation creating the Department and who later served on the 9/11 Commission, is in the running. Roemer has also been discussed as a possible head of the CIA

If Daschle does not make the cut for COS, he could be offered Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS), according to yet another source. Additional prospects for the HHS post are Connecticut Representative Rosa DeLauro and Howard Dean, who is a medical doctor as well as the current Democratic Party chairman.

Two high-ranking Democrats in the House, Norm Dicks of Washington and George Miller of California, could be in the running for Secretary of the Interior; Miller has also been mentioned as a possible Education Secretary. Another politician with a shot at Interior is Former Alaska Governor Tony Knowles.

The list of potential Education Secretaries includes Joel Klein, New York public schools Chancellor, and Stanford's Linda Darling-Hammond.

While not as important as Chief of Staff, the White House Counsel has in many administrations played a crucial role, especially in fights with Congress over executive branch testimony and over access to information. Top campaign finance expert, Robert Bauer, who is a key Obama advisor and a widely admired legal advisor, may have an inside track for this job if he wants it, but he has told associates that he plans to remain outside the administration while providing advice to the political wing of the operation.

California Republican Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger has not ruled out serving in a Democratic administration and is viewed as a possible Secretary of Energy or as the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. Another potential choice for Energy Secretary is Massachusetts Congressman Ed Markey, although if Kerry were to get State, Markey might fix his attention on an appointment to Kerry's Senate seat.

Cassandra Butts, "a pal of Obama's at Harvard," could be a candidate for Housing and Urban Development or for the Education Department. She may have to fight off competition from a powerful interest group, the US Conference of Mayors, however. At least three current and former chief executives of major cities have been mentioned for HUD, including the District of Columbia's Tony Williams, Detroit's Dennis Archer and Atlanta's Shirley Franklin.

There could be some intense competition for the Labor Secretary spot, with Service Employees Institutional Union (SEIU) president Andy Stern, former Democratic House Leader Dick Gephardt, and former House Democratic Whip David Bonior looking at the post.

Among those under consideration for Transportation are Minnesota Congressman James Oberstar, chairman of the Transportation & Infrastructure Committee, and Pennsylvania Governor Ed Rendell, a Hillary supporter in the primaries. Rendell has also been discussed as a possible Commerce Secretary, along with former Dallas Mayor Ron Kirk and Kansas Governor Kathleen Sebelius.

Montana Governor Brian Schweitzer has been mentioned for Agriculture, but sources say that coming to Washington could damage Schweitzer's appeal as a Western politician and his potential as a candidate for national office in the future. Former Iowa Governor Tom Vilsack, who also backed Hillary in his state's caucus, is another prospect for the post.

A choice that would probably win widespread support would be the selection of former Georgia Senator Max Cleland, who lost both legs and one arm in Vietnam. Many Democrats remain deeply bitter over Cleland's defeat in his 2002 re-election bid at the hands of Saxby Chambliss who ran an ad showing Cleland's face morphing into Osama bin Laden.

The prospects after November 4 for all of these competitors remain highly uncertain. One of the most consistent qualities of the Obama operation is that key players hold their cards close to the vest. From all outward appearances, Obama intends to make his appointments quickly and has reportedly already started the vetting process on 700 possible candidates for jobs at all top levels. Facing two wars and the threat of a brutal recession, Obama will have little leisure time after election day, when he will have to negotiate the tricky two-and-a-half-month transition process during which he will be the president-elect with an adversary still holding the powers of office.

Hi all – We wanted to give you some updates on recent events, Foundation work, and announcements in the news this week.

Chelsea Clinton highlights progress made and gaps that remain for gender equality Yesterday, in recognition of Women's History Month, Chelsea Clinton authored an essay on Mogul about the progress that has been made for girls and women since the release of the No Ceilings Full Participation Report last year. The piece also highlights the upcoming CGI U meeting and students' Commitments to Action that are tackling gender inequities in the U.S. and abroad. Join the conversation throughout the month on social media using the hashtag #CeilingBreakers . You can also read a piece on E! Online about the essay.

> "Over the course of the last year, we've also seen incredible progress and continued momentum in the effort to advance gender equality worldwide…Equally as inspiring are the incredible advocates and ceiling breakers who are speaking out, achieving at new heights, and working to improve not only their lives, but the lives of everyone around them.
> This idea drives so much of our own work at the Clinton Foundation, and especially our annual Clinton Global Initiative University (CGI U) meeting, which will kick off next month…Every year, we see remarkable CGI U commitments tackling gender inequities here in the U.S. and around the world."

CHMI works to expand access to opioid overdose medication
A CNBC piece explains how rural communities have experienced a 200 percent hike in fatal opioid overdoses since 2002, and the article discusses how the Clinton Health Matters Initiative, working with Adept Pharma, is working to ensure that high schools have access to lifesaving medication that reverses the effects of those overdoses.

> "'When somebody overdoses there isn't always time to get them to a hospital,' Catlin said. 'That's why it's so important than first responders carry [naloxone] with them, and use it if necessary. We need to get it in the hands of a lot more people.'…In January, Adapt Pharma said it will offer a free carton of Narcan Nasal Spray to all U.S. high schools through state education departments, and work with the Clinton Health Matters Initiative to increase naloxone access nationwide."

The Clinton Foundation at South by Southwest 2016
Drawing on his experience working on 'Inside Impact: East Africa ,' a virtual reality film featuring President Clinton and Chelsea on their 2015 trip to East Africa, Bryan Mochizuki, CGI's Director of Marketing, participated on a panel at this year's South by Southwest Festival (SXSW) on the future of virtual reality technology in philanthropy.
Read a live-blog of the panel here: http://www.thekindlechronicles.com/2016/03/15/virtual-reality-from-empathy-to-action-liveblog-at-sxsw/

Terri McCullough, CEO of No Ceilings, also participated in SXSW on a panel about the barriers that #WomenInTech face.

Alliance for a Healthier Generation encourages healthy snacking with fresh produce Alliance for a Healthier Generation's Nutrition Advisor authored a post on the USDA's blog this week about how fresh produce leads to smart snacking. Later this spring, the Alliance is launching its 'Smart Food Planner,' an online database of healthy foods, recipes, and menus.

> "Produce is packed full of the nutrients youth need to learn and play, whether at school, in an out-of-school time program, or at home. Children should be exposed to a variety of fruits and vegetables to help ensure these products are what come to mind when reaching for a snack…The Alliance for a Healthier Generation, in collaboration with the United Fresh Produce Association, has identified several kid-friendly, single-serve, fresh produce snacks that meet USDA's Smart Snacks in School nutrition standards and offer easy, delicious snack options for schools or out-of-school

Breitbart News misleads readers about the Clinton Foundation

A piece posted on Media Matters explains how a recent article by Breitbart News used inaccurate data to support false claims against the Clinton Foundation. Media matters explains:

> "Breitbart News report misread results from a database to inaccurately claim that Clinton-affiliated organizations requested up to 87 H-1B visas from 2011-2014 in an attempt to criticize Clinton…. Many other international organizations -- including the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, the American Red Cross, Human Rights Watch…and the Heritage Foundation -- have also used the H-1B visa program…a search of "Clinton" on the website finds that the 87 number is completely false. Breitbart included organizations that are not affiliated with the Clintons, such as Clinton City Schools and the Mercy Medical Center – Clinton."

In Case You Missed It:

Coverage of the work of the Clinton Foundation and how No Ceilings data informed the International Women's Day conversation included articles from a variety of national and international news outlets, including Forbes , Bustle , LinkedIn Pulse , and the Financial Times , among others.

The Global Alliance for Clean Cookstoves, a CGI Member, included President Clinton in a list of the "20 Men Who Care About Clean Cooking" in celebration of International Women's Day.

The Huffington Post featured a Q&A with Colin O'Brady , who is attempting to break the Explorer's Grand Slam world record. Colin's goal is also to raise $1 million in partnership with the Alliance for a Healthier Generation as he pursues the Explorer's Grand Slam, a mountaineering challenge to climb the Seven Summits – the tallest mountain on each continent – and ski to both the North and South Pole.

On Sunday, CNN reported that Flint Mayor Karen Weaver announced the commitment to bring $25 million in low-cost loans to help remove lead pipes and move toward clean water for Flint's citizens. This funding puts into action a CGI commitment made by labor and union pensions to create a national fund to invest in infrastructure in cities across America.

Subject:	200,000 doors to knock

Organizing for America

John --

In 2008, volunteers like you broke every record in politics -- you knocked on more doors, made more calls, and had more conversations with voters than any campaign in history.

Those conversations are what brought 15 million people to the polls for the first time, propelled Barack Obama to the presidency, and won majorities in the House and Senate.

In 2009 and earlier this year, Organizing for America volunteers like you used the lessons learned in 2008 to win historic victories reining in Wall Street and reforming a broken health care system.

But now we need to protect those gains and keep moving America forward -- which means we've got to get back on the doors, talking to voters about how important it is to vote this fall.

So we at OFA and others working to elect Democrats to Congress circled next weekend on the calendar and set a big goal: 200,000 doors knocked across the country in 48 hours.

OFA has set a goal of getting 2,413 of them from the District of Columbia -- and that means we need 80 volunteers in D.C. next weekend.

There's an event in Washington this Saturday -- can you make it, and be one of the 80 volunteers we need?

Here's what we're doing in Washington:

What: Moving America Forward event

Where: Organizing for America
430 South Capitol St. SE
Washington, DC 20003

When: Saturday, August 28th
1:00 pm EDT

RSVP

If you can't make it to the event in Washington, see if there's another one you can get to.

If Republicans win back control of Congress, we know what will happen: endless investigations into ginned-up controversies, non-stop attempts to repeal the progress we've made, and a complete drive to stop us from moving this country forward.

But we cannot go backward.

Health reform took a century-long fight to win. Its benefits are starting to help make sure families have the health care they deserve -- and you can bet this movement is going to protect what it's won.

Wall Street reform places the strictest new regulations on banks that they've faced since the Great Depression -- no wonder the Republicans are already saying they'll fight to repeal it, to make life easier for their special-interest friends.

To protect what we've won and keep the change coming -- from clean-energy legislation to immigration reform to putting more Americans back to work -- we're not done.

Which is why we need to keep fighting to get folks to the polls this fall.

We know -- from our own experience and research -- that nothing has more of an effect on voter behavior than real conversations. That's why OFA volunteers getting people to commit to voting -- on doorsteps and on the phone -- could well be the deciding factor in close races across the country.

I hope you can make it out on Saturday, and be one of the 80 volunteers that OFA needs in Washington to hit its goal next weekend:

Yes and who is rating special interests as a top issue and do they move? if you look at our supporters how does that wrong track-special interest question come out.

basically cut a banner looking at who rates the "washington dominated by special interests" wrong track answer as high. cut another looking at who is responding to the other strongest corruption attack (huckabee doubts battery?)

Caucuses play an important role in picking America's next leader. The one problem? They're wildly undemocratic.The next time Trump claims no one has been hurt at one of his rallies, feel free to share this map. And, Marco Rubio is out -- of politics altogether, for now.

America Is Supposed To Be A Democracy. So Why Do We Still Have Caucuses?

Keane Schwartz, a Bernie Sanders supporter, was the lone Democratic voter at his Iowa precinct last month. So it came as somewhat of a surprise when he saw state results list his jurisdiction as having awarded its delegate to Hillary Clinton. “It was really suspicious,” Schwartz told the Des Moines Register. “I’m actually pretty irate about it.”...(read more)

Fund for America Friends,

Paul, Susan and I all agreed that we would embrace the principles for ethical spending by campaigns. Quick question: who was the accountant you are using for the 527 who helped develop them?

I also might take a crack at shortening this just so we can make it simple.

Hi John, thanks again for today. Got some good feedback from folks, including some pledges to host and max out (and I think Chris Ruggerio did so tonight). Everyone left feeling motivated and engaged. Enjoy the rest of your trip and hope to see you soon. My best to Sara and the rest of the Brooklyn crew.

John,

Tea Party extremists are determined to force a government shutdown - even though folks in their own party say it's a terrible idea.

The fact is, the Tea Party had their chance to make a positive difference, and they failed. It's time to get back on track and ensure that the next congressional majority actually wants to get something done – not just stop the government from functioning.

Every prediction for 2014 shows that Sean's seat is critical to taking back the House. The path back to the majority runs straight through the Hudson Valley. But he can't win this fight alone.

Click here to help take back the House by contributing to Sean's campaign – we're still $8,000 short of our August goal.

The Tea Party won't back down. They'll continue to call for a government shutdown, no matter how devastating it would be to our economy – an economy that's just now getting back on it's feet.

The only way we can stop their dangerous obsession is by standing together now, before they have the chance to shut us down.

Please give what you can right now, before it's too late.

Together, we can keep momentum on our side, and take back the House.

Maura

It will be three days after she's announced and on her first day in Iowa, where caucus goes have a sharply more negative view of Wall Street than the rest of the electorate. Wall Street ranks first for Iowans among a list of institutions that "take advantage of every day Americans", scoring twice as high as the general election electorate. I recognize the sacrifice and dissapointment that cancelling will create, but it's a very consequential unforced error and could plague us in stories for months. People would (rightfully) ask how we let it happen.

Almost every black person I know, regardless of socio-economic status, has a story about a run-in with the police. If it didn't happen directly to them, the story is about a friend or relative; some of us have also internalized and taken lessons from those stories growing up. If you're lucky, you also have a good story involving a police officer, which counters the negative. Because like everyone else, you want to be able to trust and rely on the police.

When I was about eight or nine years old, my father and I were pulled over late one night on a dark stretch of highway. Like a scene from a horror movie, it was late so there weren't many other cars on the road, and it was very hot. We'd been visiting relatives in Martinsville, Virginia, and were heading back to New York City. I knew my dad hadn't been speeding, so at first I honestly didn't think much of it. As my father got out of the car he told me not to worry. But the terse and disrespectful tone in the officer's voice as he questioned my father made things feel even tenser, which scared me.

He had the power. Then he said, "Boy, you got some ID?" I'd never heard anyone speak to my father like that. I was stunned and then furious. Then I realized why we'd been pulled over – my father was a black man driving a nice car; that image just didn't seem right to the officer, who was white. The officer was rude as he asked about where we were coming from and where we were going, I noted how patient my father was with these irrelevant questions. Finally, we were free to go. Part of the reason that incident has always stayed with me is how different the whole experience and tone of the interaction was from ones I'd had with my mother, who is white. That incident was long before police departments had military-style equipment at their disposal....

Demilitarizing the police isn't enough

Demilitarizing the police isn't enough

Beyond demilitarization and being aware of bias, we have to find ways to change actual police behavior.

Hi everyone --

Attached is a draft of inserts for tomorrow's rally in Phoenix. She won't have a podium so I've written up a few bullets she can digest ahead of time on 3 key topics: K-12, guns and immigration. Each have an Arizona focus.

I have Bernie contrast in guns, and Trump/Arpaio contrast in immigration... and I've included Bernie contrast in immigration, too, though I'm not sure we're doing that.

Let me know what you think. Thanks!

I'm disappointed that the Committee wasted so much time on questions with little or no relevance to the attacks in Benghazi or improvements we should make going forward. New TV ad Hits Airwaves in 4 U.S. House Districts: Republicans in Congress are Recklessly Risking Defaulting on Our Nation's Debt and Driving The Economy Off The Cliff

Ad: U.S. Reps. Sean Duffy (WI-7), Dave Camp (MI-4), Chip Cravaack (MN-8), Richard Hanna (NY-24) Are Willing to Risk American Jobs to Protect Tax Breaks for Millionaires, Big Oil Companies and Corporate Jets

Washington DC – The clock is running out. With the August 2 deadline fast approaching for Congress to avoid defaulting on the nation's debt obligations, which the business and economic communities warn could lead to another Great Recession and cost hundreds of thousands of Americans their jobs, a new TV ad begins airing today in the districts of U.S. Reps. Sean Duffy (R-WI-7), Dave Camp (MI-4), Chip Cravaack (MN-8), and Richard Hanna (NY-24), urging them to stop risking the American economy to protect big oil subsidies and tax breaks for millionaires, corporate jets, and companies that ship jobs overseas. See script below for "Reckless," an effort sponsored by the Service Employees International Union (SEIU) and Americans United for Change.

Mary Kay Henry, President of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU): "These Partisan extremists seem willing to drive our economy right off a cliff unless they can enact their job-killing cut and gut economic policies. Congress should be focused on creating jobs, not finding ways slash Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid. Working families will not forget those who step forward for a balanced approach and those who wish to sacrifice the American Dream to satisfy an ideological agenda."

Tom McMahon, Executive Director, Americans United for Change: "These Republicans are all playing a dangerous game of chicken with the economy by threatening to let the nation default on its debt obligations – and he's risking it all for no other reason but to protect tax breaks for millionaires, Big Oil, hedge fund managers, and companies that outsource U.S. jobs. The consequences of failing to act can not be overstated. The business, economic and financial communities warn that default could crash our economy, burn hundreds of thousands of jobs and, ironically, would mean hundreds of billions of dollars in new debt because it would permanently spike interest rates. The government warns it would have to immediately cease sending out Social Security checks and other benefits that our seniors, veterans, and people with disabilities are counting on. This is not a game. If Republicans in Congress were really serious about getting the nation's fiscal house in order, they would stop threatening to derail the economy and explode the nation's debt by defaulting -- and they would start voting to end wasteful subsidies to big oil and close corporate tax loopholes."

In addition to the TV ad effort, SEIU will run video pre-roll ads on local news Web sites as well as geo-targeted video ads on Google's network in Sean Duffy's district. SEIU will also run Facebook ads targeting fans of all four representatives and Democrats in their districts.

CONSEQUENCES OF DEFAULTING ON NATION'S DEBT: "Dangerous Gamble," "higher federal debt," "Could Blow Up the Economy," "possible collapse in equity prices, bank failures and a severe depression"

- Washington Post's Ezra Klein, July 11: 'Defaulting on the debt would return us to recession' : $134 billion, or 10 percent of August's GDP. That's the size of the economic hit we'll take if the debt ceiling isn't raised and the federal government has to slash spending by 44 percent for the month of August.

- Center for American Progress, July 12 : The last time the United States experienced a "technical default" in 1979—the kind that House Majority Leader Eric Cantor (R-VA) assures us doesn't really matter —interest rates spiked by some 0.6 percentage points on a "permanent basis." Economist Christian E. Weller, estimates that a one-half percentage point increase in the 10-year Treasury rate will raise mortgage rates by 0.66 percentage points.

- Think Progress, July 15, 'Boehner Agrees With Obama That Social Security Checks May Not Go Out If The Debt Ceiling Isn't Raised' : As a report from the Bipartisan Policy Center laid out, "the government likely would not have enough revenue to pay the full $23 billion payment to Social Security recipients due on Aug. 3" were the debt ceiling not raised, because of the high amount of Social Security payments that are due that day.

- Center for American Progress, 7/7/11 : We've shown that a two-month failure to raise the debt limit could result in the largest quarterly economic decline since 1947…That would obviously be a bigger decline than in any quarter of the Great Recession. And the worst quarter of the Great Recession saw a loss of nearly 2 million jobs."

- Wall Street Journal, 5/17: Business Groups to Congress: 'Raising Debt Ceiling Is Critical' : Sixty-two business groups, including the American Gas Association, the Telecommunications Industry Association, and the National Association of Manufacturers, urged congressional leaders on Wednesday to raise the federal debt ceiling amid fears that political brinkmanship could lead to another financial crisis.

- Talking Points Memo, 6/9: "Experts: Even Brief Default Could Blow Up The Economy" : Because interest rates on bonds determine how much it costs the US government to secure more debt, even seemingly slight changes can affect the long term deficit on a large scale. A 1% rise in interest rates, or 100 basis points, would grow the deficit by over $400 billion over the next five years and $1.2 trillion from 2012-2021, according to the CBO.

- Talking Points Memo, 6/14: 'CBO Director Elmendorf: Debt Default 'A Dangerous Gamble' . Ironically, Elmendorf noted that one of the potential consequences of even a brief period of default would be higher federal debt, triggered by a spike in interest rates and, thus, higher interest payments on federally issued debt.

- Wall Street Journal, May 13: US Chamber Urges Lawmakers to Raise Debt Limit 'Expeditiously' . The business community's chief lobby in Washington made the case in a letter to lawmakers signed by Bruce Josten, the group's head of government affairs, arguing that failure to pass legislation authorizing an increase in borrowing by Aug. 4 "would create uncertainty and fear, and threaten the credit rating of the United States."

- Politico, 4/27: 'Bank execs warn GOP on debt limit' : Executives from the deep-pocketed industry that traditionally pumps millions into political campaigns are warning members that failure to raise the limit would risk a spike in interest rates, a possible collapse in equity prices, bank failures and a severe depression.

- If Republicans in Congress Won't Listen to the American People, Will They Listen to Ronald Reagan? SEE: NPR: Poll: More Americans Than Not Now Back Debt Ceiling Boost . CLICK HERE TO LISTEN to audio of President Ronald Reagan delivering his weekly radio address in September 1987, words that the GOP should very much heed today: "Congress consistently brings the Government to the edge of default before facing its responsibility. This brinkmanship threatens the holders of government bonds and those who rely on Social Security and veterans benefits. Interest rates would skyrocket, instability would occur in financial markets, and the Federal deficit would soar. The United States has a special responsibility to itself and the world to meet its obligations. It means we have a well-earned reputation for reliability and credibility — two things that set us apart from much of the world."

Dear Megan,

Not sure if this would be of interest to your father or not, but here are some details on an upcoming event that is looking for a high-ranking political person to be a speaker at their event:

On behalf of the dedicated military spouses and partners that make up the global membership of the American Military Partner Association (AMPA), I wanted to reach out to you to talk about being a speaker at the 2015 AMPA National Gala, which will be held on Saturday, May 9th, 2015 at the Hyatt Regency Capitol Hill in Washington, DC.

Since 2009, AMPA has been the nation's first and largest organization dedicated to supporting the partners, spouses, and families of America's LGBT service members and veterans. AMPA is a 501(c)3 nonprofit, nonpartisan organization and has grown to the strength of nearly 40,000 members and supporters. We are proud to be the leading organization in the nation providing education, advocacy, and support for our LGBT military and veteran families.

Last year at our inaugural national gala dinner, more than 300 of our members and guests from across the country flew to Washington to attend this event, and we expect up to 500 to attend this year. Our keynote speaker last year was Assistant Secretary of Defense for Military Community and Family Policy Rosemary Williams, and our community hero honorees included Tracy Johnson, an Army veteran who became the first known same-sex war widow the previous year when her wife, SSG Donna Johnson, was killed in action in Afghanistan.

This year the gala will focus on recognizing the enormous progress we have made over the past year, thanks in large part to laudable decisions by the Courts and by the Administration to fully embrace, recognize, and support our modern military families. We will also once again honor the sacrifices that our community's military and veteran families continue to make and bestow our second annual Community Hero Award on another of our member spouses.

If you want to learn more about the organization, you can visit the website www.MilitaryPartners.org , and if you want to take a look at the Sponsorship opportunities, you can visit www.MilitaryPartners.org/sponsors/ .

Thank you for the consideration,

Please let me know if you think this is something that your father may want to do. Thanks,

Jon

Ted Strickland for SENATE

Friend --

When I was growing up in Ohio, if someone refused to do their job, they wouldn't be employed very much longer. It seems like Senator Portman never learned that lesson.

Senator Rob Portman is flat-out refusing to do his job. He's ignoring his constitutional responsibility to give President Obama's Supreme Court nominee a fair hearing. He's shirking his responsibilities to our nation, jeopardizing the institutions of our democracy, and engaging in exactly the kind of dysfunctional behavior that frustrates Ohioans about Congress.

Seems like grounds for losing your job to me.

Ohio deserves a senator who will follow the Constitution, not his political party. Ohio deserves a senator who will listen to Ohioans, not his dark money friends. Ohio deserves a senator who will give the President's Supreme Court nominee a hearing immediately -- not someone who is willing to keep the Supreme Court one justice short for purely political interests.

Will you support my campaign to ensure that in 2016, we can take back Ohio, take back the Senate, and put an end to the senseless obstruction in Washington? With the Supreme Court at stake, your support couldn't be more important at this critical moment.

The Supreme Court is at stake. Contribute $25 right away!

If you've saved payment info with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately.

If you care about workers' rights, women's rights, affordable healthcare, the environment or virtually any major issue being debated in America today, then Portman and his allies refusal to give President Obama's nominee a fair hearing and an up or down vote directly affects YOU. So let's get to work.

Thanks,

Ted

ROLLOUT PLAN FOR TAX/HEALTH RECORDS FOR FRIDAY, JULY 31

Round 1

At 1 PM: Pitch the first round of stories to the travelling press corps (AP, Politico, WSJ, WaPo, etc) with a 2 pm embargo. For these stories, we will:

Provide the full text of HRC's physician's letter, summarizing that she is in excellent health and is medically fit to perform the duties of President. We will push that she is the FIRST presidential candidate to release this info.

Also indicate that the tax returns will be posted later in the day.

- In describing that the tax returns are forthcoming, we will stress that the amount of our disclosure will better Jeb's in three key ways:

1. TOTAL YEARS OF RETURNS: Jeb made a big deal of releasing 33 years of returns, a record for a presidential candidate. Today we are posting the Clintons' returns from 2007-2014 on our website. The returns for '92-2006 were already available online, and 1977-1991 were reported on extensively when they were made available. Today's release means that Hillary Clinton has made 38 years of returns available to the press over the course of her career.

2. SPEECH INCOME: In addition to her returns, Hillary Clinton is releasing itemized income amounts for each speech delivered by her and President in 2013. (She has already done it for 2014 and the early part of 2015). Jeb did not do this.

3. INCOME SOURCES THAT PASSED THROUGH LLC: HRC will also itemize the income that went through her and the President's LLC entities. Jeb has refused to disclose the clients from whom he derived income that passed through his LLC known as Jeb Bush and Associates.

We expect the stories that pop at 2 pm to have headlines such as "CLINTON IN 'EXCELLENT HEALTH,' MEDICAL RECORDS SAY" … "CLINTON RELEASES HEALTH REPORT" … "CLINTON CAMP AIMS TO ONE-UP BUSH IN DISCLOSING FINANCES". The lede of most of these stories will be the health records since they are being released in full, but the lower paragraphs of the stories will focus on how the campaign says it will improve upon Jeb Bush's level of disclosure when the tax returns emerge.

At 3 PM: We will provide the travelers list with the toplines of Clinton's 2014 tax returns, emphasizing their effective tax rates (both federal and state-federal, combined). We will also provide advance text of the statement from HRC about how the wealthy – a category in which she includes herself – ought to pay their fair share, not seek to shrink or shirk their obligations. We will provide these materials on embargo until 4 pm.

We expect the headlines from this round to include: "CLINTONS PAID xx% RATE IN 2014" … "CLINTON, RELEASING RETURNS, SAYS WEALTHY SHOULD PAY MORE."

Round 3

At 4 pm: Concurrent with the Round 2 stories popping, a webpage will go live on hillaryclinton.com . There, the following materials will be listed:

- Intro paragraph explaining what we are posting
- HRC statement
- Links to:
  - 2007-2014 returns
  - Itemized speech income from 2013
  - Physician's letter

We will send out a brief release providing reporters with the link to this page. From this point on, reporters will dig into specific details in search of negative storylines, and re-write the Round 1 and Round 2 stories to reflect the additional detail. Among the storylines we expect reporters to zero in on once they dive into the full returns:

The actual income amounts (to the dollar) reported by the Clintons for 2014, and cumulatively for the eight years reported. (Previously, their incomes only needed to be stated as a range under the Personal Financial Disclosure Form). Using this figure, reporters will dwell on the Clintons' sheer wealth.

The fact of HRC's LLC entity. Again, we will try to put the focus on how we are going beyond what Jeb did in disclosing all the income sources for this LLC, but the fact of it will be new to reporters.

The actual income amount earned by WJC from his consulting contracts, especially Laureate.

Reporters will also scrutinize the 2013 speech list for overlap between speech hosts and campaign/Foundation donors that could fuel "pay-to-play" storylines.

Despite these inevitable angles, based on the framing performed in the earlier rounds of stories, we will have given ourselves the best possible, "fighting" chance of promoting the most helpful storylines (i.e., the superlative of being the first candidate to release her health records, the Clintons' high effective tax rate, their call for a more progressive tax code that asks wealthy individuals like themselves to pay more, the heightened transparency of HRC's tax returns as compared to Jeb's, etc).

Subject:	Outline of finance structure

Below is the finance organizational outline I wanted to discuss on our 7pm call. John, I'm sending you another document I want to discuss with you afterwards.
Talk to you soon!

PRINCIPLES

- No titles (for the first two quarters?)
- Merit based system for titles or roles later in the campaign
- No consultants (say at least for the first two quarters?)

STRUCTURE

Finance Chair (necessary)?
This person would be a point of contact to manage politics and incoming from key donors.

"Kickoff committee"
This would be a committee of die-hard supporters and past raisers that would organize regional briefings (with John?) in target cities/markets to kick off the raising effort. Attendees would be asked to raise a certain amount of primary money each by Q2 (do we need events to support this?).
This committee would be a select group with demonstrated capacity to organize raisers. It would act as a test for people who desire a leadership role in the campaign's fundraising efforts. This could also be a place to direct people who have asked for a consulting role in the campaign.

Examples:
--Capricia Marshall?
--Brian Wolff?
--JB Pritzger?
--Laura Hartigan?
--How do we want to engage elected officials?

About the Report

The fossil fuel divestment movement, currently active on more than 1,000 college and university campuses, is an attack on freedom of inquiry and responsible social advocacy in American higher education. The movement asks colleges and universities to withdraw investments from coal, oil, and natural gas companies. More importantly, it aims to turn the endowment into a billboard for virtue signaling and to recast the university as a political weapon. This fall, divestment activists are using divestment to seed a radical campaign to push for a strong climate pact at the UN climate summit in Paris this December. This report closely examines the movement's structure, critiques its goals, and offers the most exhaustive encyclopedia of its activity, successes, and failures to date.

Wondering if there is any value in adding Trump's statements today to what we have here on Bush. Together it actually might be stronger and quite frankly Trump is not going any where and Bush is stuck in single digits

Subject: DRAFT: TPs on guns for tomorrow in NH

Here are short TPs about guns for the NH community college town hall tomorrow.

This is not a town hall exclusively about gun violence -- it's just a regular town hall. But the person who will introduce her will tell a story about gun violence in her life, and there will be people in the audience from gun violence orgs.

Since she won't have a podium, rather than write TPs that cover her broader message, I just did guns.

See what you think. Attached and pasted below.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON
TALKING POINTS ON GUN VIOLENCE PREVENTION
MANCHESTER, NEW HAMPSHIRE
MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2015

- Too many families have stories like Erin's – or worse.
- We've seen yet another mass murder – this time, in a community college in Oregon that's probably a lot like this one. That same day, a five-month-old baby girl strapped into her car seat was killed by a stray bullet in Cleveland. She was the third child killed by a gun in Cleveland in the last month alone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- We can't just pray for the victims and their families, and pretend like that's enough. It's not nearly enough. We need to act. We need to build a movement.
- You shouldn't have to be afraid to go college, or the movies, or a Bible study class, or to drive around your hometown with your kids in the backseat. What's wrong with us that we can't we stand up to the NRA and gun manufacturers?
- I'm sick of politicians reacting to gun deaths with what amounts to a shrug. Here's what Jeb Bush actually said about the massacre in Oregon: "Look," he said. "Stuff happens. There's always a crisis. And the impulse is always to do something. And it's not necessarily the right thing."
- Governor: you couldn't be more wrong. This kind of violence doesn't just happen. We let it happen. We let it happen when we don't take sensible steps to keep guns out of the wrong hands. We let it happen when we don't do anything to gun dealers who break the rules. We let it happen when children die and we don't do a thing about it.
- People who claim they want to lead America shouldn't just accept the mass murder of Americans. You deserve so much better than that.
- As President, I'll take on the gun lobby. I'll fight to stop domestic abusers and people with mental illness from getting guns… to revoke the licenses of gun dealers who break the rules… to get military-style weapons off our streets… and to end the special immunity that protects gun-makers from accountability.
- If Congress doesn't act to prevent gun violence, as President, I will. That's a promise.

HILLARY CLINTON: A RECORD OF SERVICE TO VETERANS

"When I'm President, I will continue this work and this record. I will summon the resources and will of this nation to give our veterans the gold standard health care, earned benefits, and support they deserve. Our veterans have served America – and it is time that America served our veterans. I will start first by ensuring that my Veterans Affairs Department is on your side. And that my VA Secretary is a true veterans' advocate who understands the problems of our veterans. I'm not going to have a Secretary of Veterans Affairs – I'm going to have a secretary for veterans, someone who will be qualified and committed and dedicated every single day to help our veterans. I will also work to guarantee funding for VA health. It is outrageous that veterans have to come every year to the Congress begging for the money they need to get the health care they deserve. We're going to work toward mandatory funding and end the yearly budgets."

- Hillary Clinton, August 20, 2007

Passed legislation helping families care for veterans with traumatic brain injuries or post-traumatic stress disorder. Hillary Clinton introduced the Heroes at Home Act of 2006 to help family members care for veterans that return home with post-traumatic stress disorder or traumatic brain injuries. Clinton successfully fought to include an important part of that bill — funding for community-based programs that provide readjustment and mental health assistance to National Guard members, Reservists, and their families – into the Department of Defense Appropriations bill enacted in September, 2006. With the help of the Wounded Warrior Project, the National Military Family Association, the Military Officers Association of America, and the American Academy of Neurology, Clinton introduced the Heroes at Home Act of 2007 to build on that previous work.

Worked to increase the survivor benefits for military families from $12,000 to $100,000. Hillary Clinton worked with Republicans and Democrats in the U.S. Senate to try to increase the benefits to family survivors of our nation's veterans. Clinton joined with then-Senator Chuck Hagel (R-NE) on the Military Survivor Benefit Improvement Act of 2005. Remarking on the importance of the bill, Clinton said America owes "our young men and women in uniform a tremendous debt of gratitude and they should rest assure that if something happens to them on the front lines, their families will be taken care of financially. This bill will ensure that our service members' next-to-kin receive the benefits they deserve."

Teamed up with Republicans to expand health care for National Guard members and reservists. Hillary Clinton worked with Senator Lindsey Graham (R-SC) to provide full military health benefits to National Guard members and reservists. Clinton noted that she and Graham worked for four years on that mission, even though "many people thought I would never talk to Lindsey Graham, let alone work with him... So Senator Graham and I said we're going to make sure that if you're a National Guard or Reserve member, you will have access to health care and you'll be part of this great American military from the very beginning. We will take care of you and your families." Senator Graham praised Clinton's "longstanding commitment to ensuring that members of our National Guard and Reserve and their families have access to the health care benefits they need and deserve."

Authored a new G.I. Bill of Rights to help veterans adjust and re-enter the workforce after deployment. Hillary Clinton introduced the 21st Century G.I. Bill of Rights to help veterans achieve their American dream through educational opportunities, a new veteran-specific micro-loan program, and an expanded home loan program. Clinton said she took "tremendous personal pride in the fact that the VFW has endorsed" the legislative package. Describing the new G.I. Bill of Rights, Clinton said it "provides educational opportunities – from college, to trade and technical training, to certification and licensing programs. It expands opportunities for veterans to buy, build, repair and improve their homes. It creates a Veterans Micro-loaning Program to provide loans up to $100,000 at very low interest rates and without collateral, so that veterans can start their own small businesses."

Fought to expand retirement pay and disability compensation for veterans disabled during their service. Hillary Clinton cosponsored the Retired Pay Restoration Act of 2001 , 2003 , 2005 , and 2007 . This legislation sought to expand retirement pay and disability compensation for all of America's veterans disabled in the service of their country.

Expanded the Family and Medical Leave Act to families of wounded service members. The defense authorization bill enacted in 2008 included legislation introduced by Senator Chris Dodd and Senator Clinton to allow families of wounded service members to take up to six months unpaid leave to care for their wounded family member. Clinton cosponsored similar legislation in 2003 and 2005 .

John,

I would suggest HRC dramatize a call for a new jobs plan, esp. infrastructure, and key point give major focus to the theme Do Not Leave Anyone Behind. Major media misses the point of why so many Americans say they are unhappy with the economy and right track, wrong track. Economy is not nearly as strong for a large number of Americans as the topline economic data would suggest. Key data in today's jobless numbers are the historically low labor participation rate and flat wages (when the daily cost of living is higher than top line inflation data suggest).

Re labor participation some of it is retiring boomers, but a lot of it involves workers who are psychologically depressed or can't find acceptable work and are no longer counted in jobless data, and also jobless claims data because long ago the time period for their jobless benefits ran out (I did everything I could to get Democrats to make this an issue prior to 2014 midterms but nobody cared).

Remember in Argentina and other Latin nations in the 1980's we had the "disappeared" who dictatorships imprisoned and they just disappeared.

Today in America we have economically disappeared, they don't score in jobs numbers or jobless claims numbers, they are a lost generation within the larger generation, Obama never talks about them because he wants to claim credit for the economy.

My suggestion: Hillary directly address them personally, politically and with economic ideas aimed to help them. For this large swath of Americans we are still in recession and HRC should be their champion.....

Dear Mr. Baquet:

I am writing to officially register our campaign's grave concern with the Times' publication of an inaccurate report related to Hillary Clinton and her email use.

I appreciate the fact that both you and the Public Editor have sought to publicly explain how this error could have been made. But we remain perplexed by the Times' slowness to acknowledge its errors after the fact, and some of the shaky justifications that Times' editors. We feel it important to outline these concerns with you directly so that they may be properly addressed and so our campaign can continue to have a productive, working relationship with the Times.

I feel obliged to put into context just how egregious an error this story was. The New York Times is arguably the most important news outlet in the world and it rushed to put an erroneous story on the front page charging that a major candidate for President of the United States was the target of a criminal referral to federal law enforcement. Literally hundreds of outlets followed your story creating a firestorm that instilled real damage on our campaign that can never be undone. This problem was compounded by the fact that the Times took an inexplicable, let alone indefensible, delay in correcting the story and removing "criminal" from the headline and text of the story.

To review the facts, as the Times itself has acknowledged through multiple corrections, the paper's reporting was false in several key respects: first, contrary to what the Times stated, Mrs. Clinton is not the target of a criminal referral made by the State Department's and Intelligence Community's Inspector Generals, and second, the referral in question was not of a criminal nature at all.

Just as disturbing as the errors themselves is the Times' apparent abandonment of standard journalistic practices in the course of its reporting on this story.

First, the seriousness of the allegations that the Times rushed to report last Thursday evening demanded far more care and due diligence than the Times exhibited prior to this article's publication.

The Times' readers rightfully expect the paper to adhere to the most rigorous journalistic standards. To state the obvious, it is hard to imagine a situation more fitting for those standards to be applied than when a newspaper is preparing to allege that a major party candidate for President of the United States is the target of a criminal referral received by federal law enforcement.

This allegation, however, was reported hastily and without affording the campaign adequate opportunity to respond. It was not even mentioned by your reporter when our campaign was first contacted late Thursday afternoon. Initially, it was stated as reporting only on a memo – provided to Congress by the Inspectors General from the State Department and Intelligence Community – that raised the possibility of classified material traversing Secretary Clinton's email system. This memo –which was subsequently released publicly -- did not reference a criminal referral at all. It was not until late Thursday night – at 8:36 pm – that your paper hurriedly followed up with our staff to explain that it had received a separate tip that the inspectors general had additionally made a criminal referral to the Justice Department concerning Clinton's email use. Our staff indicated that we had no knowledge of any such referral – understandably, of course, since none actually existed – and further indicated that, for a variety of reasons, the reporter's allegation seemed implausible. Our campaign declined any immediate comment, but asked for additional time to attempt to investigate the allegation raised. In response, it was indicated that the campaign "had time," suggesting the publication of the report was not imminent.

Despite the late hour, our campaign quickly conferred and confirmed that we had no knowledge whatsoever of any criminal referral involving the Secretary. At 10:36 pm, our staff attempted to reach your reporters on the phone to reiterate this fact and ensure the paper would not be going forward with any such report. There was no answer. At 10:54 pm, our staff again attempted calling. Again, no answer. Minutes later, we received a call back. We sought to confirm that no story was imminent and were shocked at the reply: the story had just published on the Times' website.

This was, to put it mildly, an egregious breach of the process that should occur when a major newspaper like the Times is pursuing a story of this magnitude. Not only did the Times fail to engage in a proper discussion with the campaign ahead of publication; given the exceedingly short window of time between when the Times received the tip and rushed to publish, it hardly seems possible that the Times conducted sufficient deliberations within its own ranks before going ahead with the story.

Second, in its rush to publish what it clearly viewed as a major scoop, the Times relied on questionable sourcing and went ahead without bothering to seek corroborating evidence that could have supported its allegation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In our conversations with the Times reporters, it was clear that they had not personally reviewed the IG's referral that they falsely described as both criminal and focused Hillary Clinton. Instead, they relied on unnamed sources that characterized the referral as such. However, it is not at all clear that those sources had directly seen the referral, either. This should have represented too many "degrees of separation" for any newspaper to consider it reliable sourcing, least of all the New York Times.

Times' editors have attempted to explain these errors by claiming the fault for the misreporting resided with a Justice Department official whom other news outlets cited as confirming the Times' report after the fact. This suggestion does not add up. It is our understanding that this Justice Department official was not the original source of the Times' tip. Moreover, notwithstanding the official's inaccurate characterization of the referral as criminal in nature, this official does not appear to have told the Times that Mrs. Clinton was the target of that referral, as the paper falsely reported in its original story.

This raises the question of what other sources the Times may have relied on in for its initial report. It clearly was not either of the referring officials – that is, the inspectors general of either the State Department or intelligence agencies – since the Times' sources apparently lacked firsthand knowledge of the referral documents. It also seems unlikely the source could have been anyone affiliated with those offices, as it defies logic that anyone so closely involved could have so severely garbled the description of the referral.

Of course, the identity of the Times' sources would be deserving of far less scrutiny if the underlying information had been confirmed as true. However, the Times appears to have performed little, if any, work to corroborate the accuracy of its sources' characterizations of the IG's referral. Key details went uninvestigated in the Times' race to publish these erroneous allegations against Mrs. Clinton. For instance, high in the Times' initial story, the reporters acknowledged they had no knowledge of whether the documents that the Times claimed were mishandled by Mrs. Clinton contained any classified markings. In Mrs. Clinton's case, none of the emails at issue were marked. This fact was quickly acknowledged by the IC inspector general's office within hours of the Times' report, but it was somehow left unaddressed in the initial story.

Even after the Times' reporting was revealed to be false, the Times incomprehensibly delayed the issuance of a full and true correction.

Our campaign first sought changes from the Times as soon as the initial story was published. Recognizing the implausibility that Clinton herself could be the subject of any criminal probe, we immediately challenged the story's opening line, which said the referral sought an investigation into Mrs. Clinton specifically for the mishandling of classified materials. In response, the Times' reporters admitted that they themselves had never seen the IG's referral, and so acknowledged the possibility that it was overstating what it directly knew when it portrayed the potential investigation as centering on Mrs. Clinton. It corrected the lead sentence accordingly.

The speed with which the Times conceded that it could not defend its lead citing Mrs. Clinton as the referral's target raises questions about what inspired its confidence in the first place to frame the story that way. More importantly, the Times' change was not denoted in the form of a correction. Rather, it was performed quietly, overnight, without any accompanying note to readers. This was troubling in its lack of transparency and risks causing the Times to appear like it is trying to whitewash its misreporting. A correction should have been posted promptly that night.

Regardless, even after this change, a second error remained in the story: the characterization of the referral as criminal at all. By Friday morning, multiple members of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform (who had been briefed by the inspectors general) challenged this portrayal—and ultimately, so did the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Department of Justice itself. Only then did the Times finally print a correction acknowledging its misstatement of the nature of the referral to the Justice Department.

Of course, the correction, coming as it did on a Friday afternoon, was destined to reach a fraction of those who read the Times' original, erroneous report. As the Huffington Post observed:

> "...it's unlikely that the same audience will see the updated version unless the paper were to send out a second breaking news email with its latest revisions. The Clinton story also appeared the front page of Friday's print edition."

Most maddening of all, even after the correction fixed the description of the referral within the story, a headline remained on the front page of the Times' website that read "Criminal Inquiry is Sought in Clinton Email Account." It was not until even later in the evening that the word "criminal" was finally dropped from the headline and an updated correction was issued to the story. The lateness of this second correction, however, prevented it from appearing in the paper this morning. We simply do not understand how that was allowed to occur.

Lastly, the Times' official explanations for the misreporting is profoundly unsettling.

In a statement to the Times' public editor, you said that the errors in the Times' story Thursday night were "unavoidable." This is hard to accept. As noted above, the Justice Department official that incorrectly confirmed the Times' initial reports for other outlets does not appear to have been the initial source for the Times. Moreover, it is precisely because some individuals may provide erroneous information that it is important for the Times to sift the good information from the bad, and where there is doubt, insist on additional evidence. The Times was under no obligation to go forward on a story containing such explosive allegations coming only from sources who refused to be named. If nothing else, the Times could have allowed the campaign more time to understand the allegation being engaged. Unfortunately, the Times chose to take none of these steps.

In closing, I wish to emphasize our genuine wish to have a constructive relationship with The New York Times. But we also are extremely troubled by the events that went into this erroneous report, and will be looking forward to discussing our concerns related to this incident so we can have confidence that it is not repeated in the future.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Palmieri

Subject: Absurd? Yes, but there's a silver lining

PROJECT ON GOVERNMENT OVERSIGHT

Dear John,

In recent months our work has been getting a lot of attention on the Internet. It's not surprising when you consider some of the outrageous things we've been writing about. There was the gas station that the Department of Defense built in Afghanistan that cost $43 million—about $42.5 million over budget. And then there was the $150 million the DoD spent in Afghanistan to rent lavish private villas for contractors and special visitors.

You can't make this stuff up.

And while it's easy to get outraged or even laugh at the absurdity of these boondoggles, we also realize there's a silver lining in it all. These questionable expenditures were uncovered by the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction.

Oversight works.

However, the flip side is that when Inspector General vacancies linger or the wrong people are put in charge, it can have serious consequences. That's one reason we're not sorry to see DoD Inspector General Jon Rymer resign. As we told Rymer on our blog: "Don't let the revolving door hit you on the way out."

All of this brings me back to one of the things we're most proud of here at the Project On Government Oversight—a database we created in 2002 that tracks misconduct by federal contractors.

We call it the Federal Contractor Misconduct Database and we recently re-launched a new and improved version of it, which makes it even easier for investigative journalists, nonprofit watchdogs, and the general public to keep tabs on contractors who break the rules.

But keeping tabs on bad contractors is just part of the equation. We are also working with lawmakers to craft reforms to lessen the undue influence industry has on government officials. By pushing for laws that limit the revolving door and increase transparency, we're helping build a more ethical and accountable government.

As the year comes to an end, I want to thank you for your continued support; it makes what we do—exposing wasteful spending and corruption, while also exploring solutions—possible.

Sincerely,

Danielle Brian

As deadlines pass, Biden remains opaque about a 2016 candidacy
By Paul Kane and Dan Balz October 2 at 12:37 PM

Another deadline has come and gone with no decision from Vice President Biden about his possible late-breaking entry into the presidential campaign.

Biden seems poised to continue his deliberations for several more weeks — and possibly into early November — leaving precious little time to launch a bid and get on the ballot in key early primary states. Prominent donors are being courted, and senior strategists with ties to President Obama’s past campaigns are in conversation with Biden’s team.

The continued indecision has made it all but certain the vice president will not take part in the first Democratic debate on Oct. 13 in Las Vegas, leaving the stage to the top two competitors, Hillary Rodham Clinton and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), and several others.

At times, Biden sounds far from ready. But then there are moments like Thursday night, when Biden sprinkled his remarks to a Manhattan crowd with comments that sounded like someone with a keen interest in running.

He made a reference to the many miles he has traveled as vice president — now clocking in at more than Clinton did as secretary of state. He also drew an ideological contrast with Sanders, who has generated enthusiasm on the left with his populist economic agenda.

“I’m not Bernie Sanders,” Biden said. “He’s a great guy, he really is. But I’m not a populist, I’m a realist,” he said at the Concordia Summit.

When Biden talks like that, it feeds speculation that he is getting ready to join the race, and there is plenty of activity around him to suggest that he is overseeing a campaign in the making.

And yet, there is a parallel universe of greater significance, the single factor that no one can overcome, which is that Biden’s family is still grieving the loss of his son, Beau, who died of brain cancer four months ago at age 46. The vice president has repeatedly said that no decision about running for president can be made until his family is ready to commit, even if it means that the moment passes.

“It’s just not quite there yet and it might not get there in time to make it feasible to run and succeed because there are certain windows that will close. If that’s it, that’s it. It’s not like I can rush it,” Biden said in an interview with “America,” a leading Jesuit news site, just before Pope Francis arrived in Washington last week.

Some Biden loyalists have been counseling against the delayed approach because it could give Clinton time to recover from self-inflicted wounds her campaign has suffered over the continued fallout of investigations into her use of a private e-mail server while serving as secretary of state.

Nine days after the debate, Clinton is scheduled to appear before a House committee established to investigate what happened in Benghazi, Libya, in September 2012, when four Americans were killed. Democrats began to rally around Clinton this week after remarks by House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) touted that the investigation had hurt her politically, prompting leading Democrats to call the investigation solely a political exercise.

Even though he is not expected at the Las Vegas debate, Biden will share a forum with Clinton this weekend. He will deliver the keynote address Saturday at the Human Rights Campaign's annual dinner in Washington. Clinton will speak to the gay rights group earlier in the day.

Biden's decision-making process continues along two separate tracks, as it has over the past several months. The first is a methodical effort by a small team of advisers to survey the political landscape and the second is Biden's internal family deliberations.

[How family tragedy has framed Biden's career]

With every week that passes, Biden and his political team believe they are more ready than ever to launch a campaign. But with every week that passes, Biden is that much closer to the point of no return — when it would be too late to mount a credible campaign.

Critical states such as New Hampshire, Texas and Florida have filing deadlines that start in November and December, requiring campaign staff on the ground to assemble voter signatures.

That sets up a particularly tense October. The vice president has already blown through previous decision-making timelines, beginning with the end of August or early September dates that advisers suggested in the spring, before the public knew that Beau Biden's brain cancer had a recurrence.

By late summer, Biden's camp clarified that the end of summer — officially Sept. 23 — was a more likely drop-dead point, only to float Oct. 1 in recent weeks because that would still allow him to be on stage at the Oct. 13 debate. On Thursday, officials at CNN, the host of the Las Vegas event, reported that Biden is not expected to participate.

Those close to Biden suggest the debate would be high risk for him. Despite his shoot-from-the-hip image, Biden is meticulous with debate preparations. For his 2012 vice presidential debate against Rep. Paul Ryan (R-Wis.), Biden logged 100 hours of preparation, including 60 hours that had been completed a full month before the encounter.

Instead of debate prep, Biden has devoted recent weeks to his vice-presidential duties. Last week, his schedule was consumed with the papal visit and the state visit by Chinese President Xi Jinping. Earlier this week, he spent a day in New York in a round of meetings with foreign leaders attending the United Nations General Assembly, and he returned there Thursday for a pair of events devoted to diplomacy.

Next Thursday he delivers remarks at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace on infrastructure funding to boost the economy, which some loyalists believe could be the hallmark of a campaign theme.

The now-lengthy deliberation has given Biden's advisers plenty of time to make a thorough assessment of the political landscape, identify available talent and scope out prospects for raising enough money. Biden's team is confident that he could raise $30 million or so to get through the first round of primaries and caucuses.

They have identified people willing to help staff a campaign, both those with past associations with Biden and many who were involved in President Obama's 2008 or 2012 campaigns.

No firm offers have been made to prospective staffers, but Biden loyalists have a good sense of who they would try to slot into the key jobs. And as one person with ties to the Obama political network, though not in direct conversation with Biden's team, put it: "There's a lot of talent available.'

The Associated Press reported Thursday that two Obama campaign veterans — Paul Tewes, who ran the successful Iowa caucus campaign in 2008 that was a key to winning the nomination, a field expert, and Marie Harf, now the State Department spokeswoman — were in talks to work on the potential Biden campaign.

Those close to Biden make no bold predictions of victory in what would be a potentially fierce contest against Clinton and Sanders. Nor are they making their calculations based on the belief that Clinton has been so weakened during the first months of her candidacy that she would be easy to defeat. Their calculations are based, instead, on the assumption that she would be a formidable opponent.

As much as he says he is not ready to make the decision, Biden has dangled hope to his supporters who view his son's loss as a rallying cry, frequently recalling his own father's admonition to "just get up" when life knocked him down.

"That's what Beau wants us to do. That's what Beau expects his father to do," Biden told the Jesuit news site. "So we're just getting up and moving on."

Subject: Nearly there! Alice and Vivek's Wedding Information

Dear Family and Friends,
親愛的親戚朋友們：
Namaste!

The wedding week is upon us. We are already feeling so much love from everyone and cannot wait to have everyone in one place. We have been stretching and getting ready for a record number of hugs!

A few final details and reminders, especially for those from out of town:

Events, Locations, and Travel Times

Friday Welcome Party (5-8pm)
We are very excited to welcome everyone to California with a casual get together at McNears Beach Park!

- Location: McNears Beach Park, Area #8, 201 Cantera Way, San Rafael.
- Directions: Drive time is about 20 minutes from Best Western / Courtyard Marriott / Inn Marin / Embassy Suites. From Hwy 101 in San Rafael, take exit 452 for Central San Rafael east (don't go through China Camp). Take 2nd St east and keep going (it will merge into 3rd St, then turn into Point San Pedro Rd). Follow Point San Pedro Rd for 3.6 miles and turn right at Cantera Way at the McNears Beach Park sign. When you enter the park, tell them you are with Alice and Vivek's Welcome Party, and parking will be free! Follow the road to the large parking lot at the end. We will be at the South lawn area just off the far right of the parking lot. After the party, make sure you turn left out of the parking lot as the right-side route is more windy and harder to navigate.
- What to Wear: When we said casual, we meant it! Jeans and sneakers are great. We are in a shaded area by the water, and it can get cool as the evening progresses, so bring a sweater or jacket.
- Activities: We have a beach volleyball court as part of our reserved area, and we have a beach volleyball, so come ready to play if you want. The park is actually open at 7am, so feel free to come early. There is also a pool that you can use for $5.

Saturday Ceremony and Reception on Saturday at 3-10pm

- Location: Cline Cellars, Great Lawn, 24737 Arnold Drive, Sonoma, CA 95476
- Directions: Drive time is about 30 minutes from Best Western / Courtyard Marriott / Inn Marin / Embassy Suites / Alice's House. Take Hwy 101 North, then CA-37E to CA-121 N in Sonoma County. Follow CA-121 N to Cline Cellars, which is on the left.
- What to Wear: Your wedding clothes, of course! Cultural dress is welcome. We will be outdoors on the Great Lawn for the ceremony, cocktails, and dinner. Wear shoes that work on a lawn (like wedges or flats for gals). Bring a hat and sunglasses if you'd like. It will get cool toward the end of dinner, so the gals will likely want a sweater or shawl. Dancing and dessert will be indoors. By the end of the night, it will be cold leaving the dance area, so we recommend that everyone has a sweater or jacket!

Casual: Sunday Morning Breakfast (approx. 8am-10am)
We finally booked our wedding night hotel and will be at the Best Western Novato Oaks! We'll be there for breakfast on Sunday morning, so come by to say hi before you head out of town! Breakfast is until 10am and includes waffles, cereal, fruit, etc.

- Location: Best Western Novato Oaks is at 215 Alameda del Prado, Novato, CA 94949. The breakfast area is on the 2nd floor.

Note on the Weather
California days will be warm (up to 80 degrees), but the evenings and early mornings are cool (down to the 50's at night) We already mentioned it but we want to be super sure that you bring something warm for the mornings and evenings!

Subject:	[big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer - The Democratic Path to Victory in the House

The Democratic Path to Victory in the House

Most of the punditry continues to assume that the die is cast – that Republicans will win control of the House this fall. Certainly that outcome is entirely possible. But there is a Democratic path to victory next Tuesday.

Fivethirtyeight.com currently portends that there are 152 solid Democratic seats, 174 solid Republican seats, 29 seats that are leaning Democratic, 42 seats that are leaning Republican and 42 toss-ups. Fivethirtyeight.com's Nate Silver gives Democrats only 17% odds of winning 218 votes.

MSNBC and Pollster.com give Democrats only a 21% chance to maintain control of the House. They rate 193 seats as Democratic, 212 Republican and 30 as toss-ups.

If you believe these and other handicappers, Democrats face long odds on Tuesday. But let's remember that even if your odds of success are one in five – they are not zero in five. People line up to play casino games with worse odds every day. Some walk away winners.

But to beat the odds and win, Democrats must be successful at four key tasks over the next five days.

1). Democrats and their allies must be successful at turning out larger than expected numbers of Latino voters. Polls show Latino voters breaking 65% to 70% Democratic, but their turnout in most Mid-terms falls well below both non-Hispanic white and non-Hispanic black voters.

Democrats have made a major effort this year to increase Latino turnout, especially in California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Illinois and Florida. Republicans have done everything they can to suppress the Latino vote, going so far as to set up a front group to run ads to actually discourage Latinos from going to the polls.

But so far it appears the mobilization resulting from the Arizona "papers please" law and Republican talk of repealing the 14th Amendment may couple with on-the-ground GOTV efforts to increase levels of participation well in excess of 2006 turnout.

That increase would be critical in a number of key races. It is especially necessary in swing seats occupied by incumbents Raul Grajalva, Solomon Ortiz, Ciro Rodriguez, John Salazar, Dina Titus, Jerry McNerney, Bill Foster, Debbie Halvorson, Suzanne Kosmas, Alan Grayson and Allen Boyd.

2). Democrats need to successfully assure that two key issues are on the minds of the voters at the close of the race: Social Security, and outsourcing jobs.

The Republicans plan to revive the failed Bush proposal to privatize Social Security. The "Road Map" plan by would-be GOP Budget Chair Paul Ryan would also eliminate Medicare and replace it with vouchers for private insurance companies. These positions are radioactive to older voters. No wonder, the Social Security Administration's own actuarial study confirms the Ryan proposal would cut benefits by up to 58%.

Polls show that this issue has enormous traction to move swing voters and it has taken center stage especially in the many swing districts that have an abundance of older voters.

Swing voters – especially in districts in the industrial heartland like Wisconsin, Ohio, Iowa, Pennsylvania and upstate New York have a deeply ingrained understanding that major corporations have been systematically outsourcing their jobs to countries where they can pay their workers less than a living wage. And it makes them positively furious that Republicans oppose cutting tax breaks that actually encourage these companies to export their jobs.

Both the Social Security and outsourcing issues put the Republicans on the defense and go directly to the concerns of everyday voters about their economic futures. Both also frame the debate correctly. They both define the antagonists in the narrative as Democrats and everyday Americans versus Republicans and big corporations and insurance companies.

To win next Tuesday, Democrats need to keep these two issues front of mind for swing voters as they go to the polls. That is especially true in districts defended by incumbents such as Mike Ross, Gabrielle Giffords, Jim Himes, Debbie Halvorson, Baron Hill, Mark Schauer, Tim Walz, Carol Shea-Porter, Dina Titus, Bill Owens, Kurt Schraeder, Steve Kagen, Earl Pomeroy, Chris Murphy, Pat Murphy, Stephanie Herseth-Sandlin, Kathy Dahlkemper, Charlie Wilson, Zack Space, Steve Driehaus, Tom Periello, Rick Boucher, Health Schuler, Bruce Braley, Mary Jo Kilroy, Dave Loebsack, Mike Arcuri, Chris Carney and John Hall.

In each of these seats the issue on the minds of the voters can move points on Election Day. Social Security and outsourcing must be front and center.

3). In many districts it is especially important that Democrats are successful in emphasizing the strong personal relationship of voters – especially older voters – with their Member of Congress. And they must also be successful at disqualifying the alternative.

Democrats must make the election a choice – not a referendum on Democratic performance. In the end, people vote for people. When they get down to making their choice on the ballot, it is critical that they remember the personal qualities that they like in Democratic incumbents and feel that the alternative is risky. There are many districts where this factor can make a decisive difference.

In some districts occupied by long-time incumbents, the constituent service operation has directly helped tens of thousands of district residents. That builds loyalty.

In others, Members have developed deep networks of personal relationships with leaders of key constituencies.

To win next week, Democrats need to engage all of those relationships and all of that personal loyalty, and contrast it with the risky Republican alternative.

Districts where these factors can be especially important are defended by colorful incumbents with strong personalities such as John Spratt, Ike Skelton, Lincoln Davis, Nick Rahall, Rick Boucher, Paul Kanjorski, Baron Hill, and Barney Frank (whose seat is really not in play).

Democrat Joe Garcia has an excellent chance of winning in Florida's predominantly Cuban American 25th District on the strength of his strong relationships in the community, a flawed Republican alternative and also a robust get out the vote operation. Which gets us to the fourth point.

4). First and foremost, for Democrats to beat the odds next Tuesday, our get out the vote operations must function flawlessly. Basically, these operations must defy the "likely voter" models that have dictated the gloomy scenario in most polls.

There is little question that between the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC), the DNC's Organize for America (OFA), the individual campaigns, and Democratic allies like AFSCME, AFL-CIO, SEIU, MoveOn.org, USAction, NEA, Center for Community Change, et al, Progressives are conducting the most effective Get Out the Vote (GOTV) effort of any Mid-term in history. Many Latino, African American and women's organizations are also conducting special programs targeting their communities.

Many of the veterans of the Obama campaign – which ran the most effective GOTV program in American history – are deeply involved. The culture and systems developed by the Obama field structure will go a long way to creating well oiled, efficient GOTV organizations. Well organized coordinated campaigns are functioning in key states, focusing heavily on early voting and mail vote in many, and this accounts for a robust showing by Democratic-registered voters in many states. And they all plan massive 72-hour voter contact drills and Election Day operations to run votes.

Democrats are relying heavily on door-to-door contact, while Republicans use paid phone calls and mail. But studies show conclusively that door-to-door contacts are far superior to phones and mail.

Over the next five days, Democrats have to deliver in the field if they intend to upset the odds. We must make millions of door-to-door and phone contacts. We must repeatedly contact voters who would vote Democratic, but our unlikely to vote. We need to explain to these voters how critical it is that they vote. And we need to deliver that very effective Election

Day message: “I won’t get off your porch until you vote!”

Everyone, no matter where you live can increase Democratic effectiveness in getting out the vote. Pick up the phone and call your local campaign, Democratic Party, your union, or MoveOn.org. Volunteer to go door to door or get on the phones.

We know from research that the more we contact mobilizable voters, the more likely they are to vote. You don’t have to “persuade” them, you just have to contact them. You just have to get their attention, and the likelihood they’ll vote goes way up.

And if you don’t live where there is a critical campaign, you can still get involved. OFA and MoveOn both have programs that allow you to call voters in swing states from the comfort of your own home.

To volunteer, go to OFA.BO/GOTV

To call swing districts: Call.BarackObama.com . That will automatically give you a targeted list of voters in a swing district.

To volunteer with MoveON with a campaign near your home, go here: www.moveon.org/2010

If you want to call from home, go here: pol.moveon.org/2010

If you want to go to a MoveOn campaign event, go here: pol.moveon.org/event/lastchance

So there is no excuse. YOU can personally affect the outcome of these elections.

Still don’t believe you can make a difference?

In 2000, our consulting firm was doing the field program for Democrat Elaine Blum for Congress in South Florida. We had an excellent operation. But we lost the race by 500 votes. That was roughly one vote per precinct.

That was the same 500 votes that cost Al Gore the Presidency – and gave us the nightmare of George Bush’s presidency – the Iraq War – massive deficits – and the 2008 economic disaster.

If our field program had gotten out one extra vote per precinct, none of that would have happened. Frankly, that keeps me up nights.

Wednesday morning, don’t say to yourself, “wow, we only lost the House by one seat – and only by a few votes – and I could have changed that.”

There is a pathway for Democratic victory, but it requires we hit on all four of these key cylinders. Too much is at stake to allow any stone to remain unturned. Pick up the phone as soon as you finish reading this. We have five days to change history.

About VoteVets.org

Dear VoteVets.org Supporter,

Yesterday, a repeal of Don't Ask, Don't Tell" was brought back to the Senate floor, after the House passed the same legislation, sponsored by Rep. Patrick Murphy. A vote is expected on Saturday. This bill must pass, but unless you act, passage is in doubt. We need you to get on the phone for two minutes, and tell your Senators that you support a passage of the bill with a repeal of "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

CALL YOUR SENATORS AT (202) 224-3121 RIGHT NOW.

We have told you in the past why a repeal is so important. This vote might be our last, best chance in a long time to make it happen. Next year, a new Congress comes in, which will be much less likely to consider a repeal. So, imagine for a moment, that in a few days it goes down in defeat, and you didn't call your Senators to make your position clear. Would you have regrets? Well, don't let that happen. Call your Senators, right now.

If you believe in a stronger military, you support a repeal. If you believe in the military encouraging service members to be fully honest, and not lie to the members of their unit about who they are, you support a repeal. If you stand with 70 percent of the military, who have no problem serving with openly gay and lesbian troops, you support a repeal. If you stand with Defense Secretary Gates and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral Mullen, you support a repeal. But, your Senators will never know that you do, unless you tell them, right now.

CALL YOUR SENATORS AT (202) 224-3121, AND TELL THEM TO REPEAL "DON'T ASK, DON'T TELL."

We need you to do this. Our military needs you to do this. I hope we can count on you to pick up the phone, right now, before you close this email. Let's get this done.

Thanks for all of your support.

Sincerely,
Ashwin Madia

CORRECT THE RECORD STATEMENT ON RELEASE OF SECRETARY CLINTON'S BENGHAZI EMAILS

CORRECT THE RECORD STATEMENT ON RELEASE OF SECRETARY CLINTON'S BENGHAZI EMAILS

Washington, DC – In response to the State Department's release of Secretary Clinton's emails pertaining to the tragedy in Benghazi, Brad Woodhouse, President of Correct The Record, gave the following statement.

"Today's release of Secretary Clinton's emails is consistent with and only reinforces the findings of the previous nine Congressional committees and multiple independent reviews that have looked into this matter: There was no Obama Administration wrongdoing on Benghazi. Moreover, the State Department has reiterated that the emails 'do not change the essential facts or our understanding of the events before, during, or after the attacks.'

"The record shows that Secretary Clinton took responsibility for the tragedy in Benghazi; she took action to ensure that such attacks don't happen again; and she's been fully transparent throughout. Secretary Clinton produced all of her work emails to the State Department and has called for all 55,000 pages of them, including these Benghazi-related emails, to be made public in an unprecedented act of transparency.

"Now that the public can see that Secretary Clinton's emails do not materially change the outcome of prior investigations that found no evidence of wrongdoing by President Obama or Secretary Clinton, it's time for Chairman Gowdy to conclude his inquiry before it is further exposed as a partisan political exercise at taxpayers' expense."

Hillary Discussed Speculation About Her Health With Aides In Emails

ALEX PAPPAS
Political Reporter

Then-Secretary of State Hillary Clinton discussed with aides the chatter on cable news about whether she actually suffered a concussion in 2012, according to emails released by the State Department on Friday.

A week before she was to testify before Congress in December 2012 about the attacks in Benghazi, Clinton postponed her appearance with aides explaining she had fainted and suffered a concussion.
On Dec. 20, chief of staff Cheryl Mills forwarded Clinton by email a transcript of Fox News host Greta Van Susteren discussing Clinton's health with Arizona Republican Sen. John McCain.

"Senator," Van Susteren said during that segment, "there is a report from the State Department that Secretary of State Hillary Clinton will testify on Benghazi before the middle of January. There has been some criticism of whether or not she has a concussion. I believe she has a concussion. What do you think?"

McCain replied: "I have never seen her back down. And I believe that she is now not physically well enough to testify and she will testify the middle of January."
Mills sent a transcript of that interview to Clinton's personal email — hrod@clintonemail.com — and to close aide Huma Abdein.
Speaking of McCain, Clinton replied: "Huma called him and [South Carolina Sen. Lindsey] Graham."
"Also," Clinton added, "someone should call Greta VS to thank her for 'knowing the truth.'"
The emails released Friday, ahead of the Memorial Day weekend, are a few of the thousands the Democratic presidential candidate has turned over to the State Department from her personal email account. Clinton acknowledges she used that email account for both personal and official business.

Statement on the Release of Secretary Clinton's Benghazi Emails

Washington, DC— Select Committee on Benghazi Chairman Trey Gowdy, R-S.C., today issued the following statement after the State Department released 300 self-selected emails from former Secretary Hillary Clinton, over which the department had no control and no custody for nearly two years. These emails were turned over to the State by former Secretary Clinton in the fall of 2014 in reaction to a request from the Select Committee:

"More than six months after the Select Committee first discovered Secretary Clinton's unusual email arrangement with herself, and after the media discovered Secretary Clinton relied exclusively on a personal server housing a personal email account eschewing any official email address, State Department transferred 300 messages exclusively reviewed and released by her own lawyers," Gowdy said. "These lawyers, it must be noted, owed and continue to owe a fiduciary responsibility to Secretary Clinton to protect her interests. To assume a self-selected public record is complete, when no one with a duty or responsibility to the public had the ability to take part in the selection, requires a leap in logic no impartial reviewer should be required to make and strains credibility."

"It is also important to remember these email messages are just one piece of information that cannot be completely evaluated or fully understood without the total record. The Committee is working to collect and evaluate all of the relevant and material information necessary to evaluate the full range of issues in context. We will not reach any investigative conclusions until our work is complete, but these emails continue to reinforce the fact that unresolved questions and issues remain as it relates to Benghazi."

"The Select Committee continues to believe the American people have a right to the full and complete record of her official emails and, therefore, asked Secretary Clinton to turn her server and the full body of emails over to a neutral, detached, independent third party for review. This is also why the State Department must comply with a months-old subpoena for emails of the former Secretary's top aides, whose emails have never been received or reviewed by any congressional committee."

"The Committee's interest is in building a complete record from which the final, definitive accounting regarding the terrorist attacks in Benghazi can be provided. The best way to answer all questions related to the attacks in Benghazi continues to be having access to the full public record, not a "record" controlled, possessed and screened exclusively by Secretary Clinton's personal lawyers."

Background Information on Released Emails:

Among the emails the Select Committee finds highlight the existence of significant investigative questions:

September 24, 2012—"Compiled protest and Benghazi Statements." A document that reinforces issues relating to characterization of the motives for the attacks. For example, Jake Sullivan noted, "You never said spontaneous or characterized the motives. In fact you were careful in your first statement to say we were assessing motive and method. The way you treated the video in the Libya context was to say that some sought to justify the attack on that basis."

August 24, 2012 — "H: Intel on new Libya president. Sid." In this document two and a half weeks before the attacks, Jake Sullivan writes to the Secretary, "Some warning signs," in response to the deteriorating security situation in Benghazi, which forced the Red Cross to suspend activities, and reinforces questions about what was done in response to these warnings.

April 4, 2012—"Secretary Clinton's Leadership on Libya." This document characterizes Secretary Clinton's ownership of U.S. policy in Libya.

April 8, 2011—"UK game playing; new rebel strategists; Egypt moves in. Sid" In this document, Secretary Clinton responded to a Blumenthal memo with, "Fyi. The idea of using private security experts to arm the opposition should be considered."

There are several instances of State personnel notifying the Secretary about security concerns and issues:

April 10, 2011 – Forwarded email about deteriorating security
April 22, 2011 – Request for continuous coverage in Benghazi, "security permitting"
April 24, 2011 – Forwarded email about hotels being targeted
June 10, 2011 – Email including information about credible threat info against hotel and that personnel are evacuating to alternate locations
August 21, 2011 – Email regarding concerns about Islamist militias
January 9, 2012 – Email stating that disarming and reintegrating of militias isn't going as well as they had hoped February 24, 2012 – Email stating that militia rivalries are dangerous
August 24, 2012 – Email stating that there are "some warning signs"

The Committee also has an interest in understanding the inexplicable gaps in the Secretary's emails during key times of her involvement in Libyan policy, including:

June 10-August 8, 2011—Time period where Secretary Clinton was heavily involved in Libya policy

September 14-October 21 2011—Dates of Secretary Clinton's trip to Libya, when the now-famous picture of Clinton on her blackberry was taken

October 21, 2011-January 5, 2012—Time period when the State Department was extending the Benghazi mission for another year

April 27- July 4 2012—Time period of increased security during which an IED was thrown at the compound blasting a hole through the wall and during which the British ambassador was attacked

First Batch of Hillary Clinton's Emails on Libya Made Public

BY CARRIE DANN
http://www.nbcnews.com/politics/hillary-clinton/first-batch-hillary-clintons-emails-libya-made-public-n362506

A batch of Hillary Clinton's personal emails made public on Thursday morning offers a glimpse into her team's initial exchange of information in the wake of the Benghazi attacks as well as her relationship with longtime confidante Sidney Blumenthal, who sent her at least two dozen memos regarding Libya during her tenure as Secretary of State.

The State Department plans to release about 850 pages of the emails, which had been handed over to the congressional panel investigating the Benghazi attacks. But on Thursday, the New York Times released about a third of that batch of correspondence, which Clinton exchanged using a private server rather than a government email account.

The documents show that, while Clinton used her personal email account to receive information the government calls "sensitive," she did not appear to use her private server to exchange classified information.

The "sensitive" information included details like the location of State Department officials in Libya during a time of instability in the country in 2011.

The documents released by the New York Times also show that Clinton received numerous briefing memos about Libya from Blumenthal, a longtime friend of the Clintons who was not employed by the State Department. The New York Times reported earlier this week that Blumenthal was also involved with a possible business venture in the country at the time.

Two of those memos from Blumenthal came in the days immediately following the September 11, 2012 Benghazi attacks.

In one, sent on September 12, Blumenthal suggested that top security officers in the country believed that the attacks "were inspired by what many devout Libyan viewed as a sacrilegious internet video on the prophet Mohammed originating in America." Clinton forwarded that information to top adviser Jake Sullivan with the message "more info."

But another memo sent the following day indicated that the attacks may have actually been carried out by a militia group. Blumenthal wrote that officials in the country "believe that the attackers having prepared to launch their assault took advantage of the cover provided by the demonstrations in Benghazi protesting an internet production seen as disrespectful to the prophet Mohammed."

The release of the emails comes after a prolonged political fight for Clinton over her use of a private email server while serving as Secretary of State.

On Tuesday, Clinton urged the State Department to expedite the vetting of the emails after initial reports suggested that the data trove would not be ready for public release until January of next year

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton received information on her private email server about the deadly attack on U.S. diplomatic facilities in Benghazi that was classified Friday at the FBI's request.

The email in question, forwarded to Clinton by her deputy chief of staff, relates to reports of arrests in Libya of possible suspects in the attack.

The information was not classified at the time the email was sent and was upgraded from unclassified to ''secret'' on Friday, according to State Department officials. The officials said 23 words of the November 2012 message were redacted from the release of 896 emails totaling 296 pages, to protect information that may damage foreign relations.

They said no other redactions were made for classification reasons.

Spokeswoman Marie Harf says publication includes 296 e-mails given to a House committee investigating the 2012 attack on the US diplomatic post in Benghazi, Libya.

She says redactions were made according to Freedom of Information Act standards. The emails will be released via the State Department's FOIA website, foia.state.gov .

The documents cover e-mails between 2011 and 2012 related to the Benghazi facility and its security, and to the broader issue of a US diplomatic presence in Libya.

Harf says the e-mails don't provide new facts about how four Americans were killed on Sept. 11, 2012. The State Department also said on Twitter that the emails don't provide a change in its understanding of the events.

The State Department is still reviewing 55,000 further pages of e-mails from Clinton's private email account. They'll be published on a rolling basis.

You all do it the way you want, but i think we're missing something just pre-releasing Dorothy. That's an important piece of her story, but what SHE did -- the fights of her life -- are equally important. I would give them both spots and fill in the broader story. 1. Her mom's struggle and it's impact on her/how it shaped her. 2. Here's what she's done, a lifelong commitment to children, families, etc.

Subject: Background TPs - Dorothy

Team – I'll let the press staff elaborate, but the current plan is to give Dorothy to some select IA and NH news outlets tomorrow evening. Once those stories run, the campaign will confirm the spot to the Beltway press and then release them both Dorothy and Families Strong on Monday am. Did I get that right press team?

Here are some draft background points – just for Dorothy – will need a new batch for Sunday am, but please weigh in with thoughts edits?

Internal Talking Points – Ad Launch "Dorothy"
For Sunday, Aug 2 2015

This week, the Clinton campaign will begin taking its case directly to the people of Iowa and New Hampshire with its first TV ad of the campaign.

The .60 second ad, titled, "Dorothy", features Hillary Clinton talking about the woman who motivated her to dedicate her life to fighting for everyday families – and that's her mother Dorothy. Hillary's mom had a very difficult childhood, but she taught Hillary that it's not about what life throws at you – it's about what you do with it. Hillary has always been a champion for people who got knocked down but refused to get knocked out.

We felt it was important to begin communicating directly to voters in August because it's likely to be the last time that the airwaves in Iowa and New Hampshire aren't totally cluttered with ads by Republican candidates and their Super PACs. It's a unique window for Hillary Clinton to cut through and take her message to voters.

The ad will air in Iowa and New Hampshire and tomorrow (Monday), we'll be placing a six-figure buy in each state. (If asked: In Iowa, it will air in Cedar Rapids and Des Moines. In NH, it will air on WMUR in Manchester, Boston cable TV and in the Burlington market).

Are you airing TV ads because of bad poll numbers?

Since day one, this campaign has been about taking Hillary's message of being a fighter for families directly to the people of Iowa/New Hampshire. And because the Republican Super PACs haven't totally clogged the airwaves yet, we believe this is a good time for that message to cut through. Plus, the latest round of polling – both in the primary and the general – showed HRC to be in very strong position, leading all Republican candidates.

Is this a soft touchy feely ad designed to deal with her trust deficit?

Everyday families in America know they can count on Hillary Clinton to fight for them, and this ad is about taking that message directly to the people of Iowa/New Hampshire.

How long will the ad air for?

We're not going to comment on the length of the buy or the strategy of future ad buys.

This ad clearly seems to be targeting women – is that true?

This ad is about Hillary Clinton's values and why she dedicated her life to fighting for families. And when Hillary talks about her mother on the campaign trail, the men in the crowds are nodding their heads right along with the women. It's about fighting for families – and getting back up again after you've been knocked down.

How much are you spending?

It's a six-figure buy and covers the largest media markets in both states.

Subject: Season's Greetings from the Global Environment Facility

Dear all,

I think we can all look back on 2015 with a sense of accomplishment and satisfaction.

The adoption of the Sustainable Development Goals in New York and the climate agreement in Paris were highlights in what we all hope will prove to be a pivotal year for the planet.

The SDGs and the Paris agreement recognize that the health of the global commons • the planet's finite environmental resources, from land and forests to oceans and the atmosphere • is essential for thriving world.

But recognition is not enough. It is now time for us to focus on actions on the ground so we can deliver on the promises of these historic agreements. This will require efforts on multiple fronts and at all levels of society. We need nothing less than a transformation of our major economic systems: energy • how we power our homes, offices, industry and transport; cities • how we live; and food production • how and where we produce food, and what we eat.

As we look forward to 2016 I believe that the GEF is uniquely placed to help catalyze the necessary action to curb the drivers of global environmental degradation
I want to take this opportunity to thank all of you for your partnership, support and shared commitment for a fresh start for planet Earth. This, above all, is what makes me hopeful that we eventually will win the battle for the global environment.

Let's make it happen.

With my best wishes for a peaceful, prosperous and sustainable 2016.

Global Environment Facility

VIDEO HIGHLIGHTS: Town Halls Spawn Main Street Movement Pushback On Republican Ideas

The GOP-led House's passage of a 2012 budget — engineered by Rep. Paul Ryan (R-WI) — has laid the Republicans' values out in the open for all to see: Strip huge amounts of funding from Medicare, Medicaid, and other programs aimed at supporting middle- and lower-income Americans, all to balance the budget (depending on whose numbers you believe) while keeping taxes on the wealthy at unprecedented lows.

Now that Republican representatives have returned to their districts for the congressional recess, everyday Americans at town hall meetings across the country are reacting with outrage at the perverse priorities of the Ryan budget. And this latestmanifestation of the burgeoning Main Street Movement against the right's economic agenda has only grown in intensity since both ThinkProgress (and even some mainstream media outlets) began reporting on the phenomenon:

About Mimi Ito, Ph.D

Mimi Ito is a cultural anthropologist of digital culture and an advocate for connected learning—learning that is youth-centered, interest-driven, hands-on and social. Decades of research on geeks, gamers, fans, activists, and artists has convinced Ito that kids learn best when they are pursuing things they care about with people who get and inspire them. Her co-authored book, Hanging Out, Messing Around, and Geeking Out: Youth Living and Learning with New Media describes new opportunities for interest-driven learning fueled by games, social media, and digital tools. In Connected Learning: An Agenda for Research and Design Ito and her colleagues in the Connected Learning Research Network map out how education can embrace today's technology to make meaningful learning available to all young people. In Fall 2014, Ito was one of the leaders of the Connected Courses project, a global online course exploring active co-learning in higher education.

Ito pursues research and educational change as the Research Director of the MacArthur Foundation funded Digital Media and Learning Hub at the University of California Irvine and advisory board chair of the Connected Learning Alliance. She is the MacArthur Foundation Chair in Digital Media and Learning and

Have you had a chance to speak with anyone in the White House about our desire to begin discussions with Brazilian entities to begin planning for a 2013 CGI Latin America in Rio? I hope this email finds you well. I am doing my best to raise my four great kids (ages 8-19) and practice law after leaving the U.S. Attorney's office close to ten years ago. I wanted to reach out and let you know that if you needed anything in Boston from stuffing envelopes, help on the ground in NH to raising money I am at your service. I would also be more than happy to help on DOJ issues. I have a ton of experience on the corporate prosecutions if that could ever be of assistance. Feel free to pass my name along to whomever I could assist in the effort. Hard to believe the Dukakis campaign was almost 30 years ago!! Be well

The idea is to go back to her 2008 position, which was that we should not be subsidizing higher earners on their health plans. But I agree that we will not be gaining much revenue nor will we be getting health savings by taking this position so and maybe cleaner just to go for repeal. The problem is that there are number of people who think that is a step too far. Let me check with her and get back on this chain after I hear back.

Califf the Obama nominee does have real ties to the drug industry - Chris Jennings is calling a few people for me to learn more so we don't tip our hand directly. We are clean on Clinton Admin FDA Commissioner - it was David Kessler, an academic who had run a teaching hospital - and best known for taking on big tobacco. We could certainly signal that we want someone willing to stand up to Pharma (in the same way Kessler stood up to Tobacco).

BUT - I want to do a little more digging and due diligence before we hit this guy. Having been through a nomination fight with my husband (in which he lost), this is personal and messy and horrible on the person nominated and their families - so I don't take attacking this guy lightly.

Do you want to do it on Meet the Press?

Also, as long as I have all of your attention - on Cadillac Tax - the general consensus is that we should frame our position as Cadillac Tax should be repealed but that we should tax people who make more than $250K b/c they don't need to have tax-payer funded subsidies. I have not nailed this down with HRC. Should I try to do that today if we are going to announce this on Meet the Press?

Today's World Headlines Feature Three Washington Oxi Day Foundation Award Winners

WASHINGTON, DC, November 13, 2015 -- Today's world headlines report developments for three extraordinary individuals who have all been awarded by the Washington Oxi Day Foundation for their courage in the pursuit of freedom and democracy: Myanmar's (Burma's) Aung San Suu Kyi; ISIS-executed American journalist James Foley; and jailed Azerbaijani human rights activist Leyla Yunus. These leaders applied to their own modern challenges the spirit the Greek people exhibited on Oxi Day -- an unmatched bravery that changed the trajectory of the Second World War.

2011 Battle of Crete Award winner Aung San Suu Kyi's political party, which she leads, won an historic election against the military-backed governing party. This result means Aung San Suu Kyi's party will choose Myanmar's next president.

John --

Tomorrow night I'm going to stand before Congress and deliver my last State of the Union address. And as I've been preparing, I keep thinking about the road we've travelled together over the past seven years and the success we've had in moving this country forward -- because we have done some remarkable things to make change happen.

Now, in my last year in office, I'm calling on your spirit of determination and optimism -- that innate decency that has always been at the core of the American people and supporters like you, John -- to work with me to continue setting this country on a better, stronger course for tomorrow. Because while I could not be more proud of everything we've accomplished together, our work is not finished, and we can't afford to be complacent.

We've still got big plans for the months ahead. It won't be easy, John -- no one ever promised that change would be easy -- but just look at how far we've come over the past seven years. We've cut our unemployment rate in half and reached record low uninsured rates. Our kids are graduating from high school in higher numbers, and we are working with countries the world over to protect our planet and make sure future generations have a safe place to call home. Today, every single person in this country has the right to marriage, no matter who they are or who they love. These are the huge and important changes we've made together and not a single step of it was easy. Just think of what we can do in this final year by applying that same determination to our work.

So right now, as I prepare to address Congress and the nation tomorrow, I'm asking you to say you're still with me and still as committed as ever to leading the fight that makes life better -- because change, as always, is going to take all of us:

http://my.democrats.org/Final-Stretch

It's the hard work of folks like you that allows us to keep moving forward, so I really appreciate you standing with me, John.

John,

The 2016 Elections are less than one year away.

That might seem like a long ways off. But we're going to build a grassroots network capable of getting more Democrats to the polls next November -- that's why we've already begun to lay the groundwork.

Click here to take our quick Democratic Strategy Questionnaire now:

http://go.turnoutpac.org/Strategy-Questionnaire

President Obama's campaigns taught us that face-to-face conversations with voters are the most effective way to make sure Democrats cast their ballots.

We're going to build on that success in some of the country's most competitive races. And that's how we'll take back Congress in 2016.

We're not the kind of group that makes mudslinging television ads. We're the kind of group that focuses on what Democrats do best -- grassroots voter turnout -- to make sure that Republicans can't advance their backwards, right-wing agenda any further.

But John, we need your input. Take our Democratic Strategy Questionnaire to help us formulate our 2016 gameplan:

http://go.turnoutpac.org/Strategy-Questionnaire

Thanks for being a part of this work,

Harry

By Daniel Halper

Hillary Clinton has arrived at her first campaign stop, completing the 965 mile trip from Chappaqua, New York to Le Claire, Iowa in about two days time. Her choice of transportation? A Secret Service owned and operated van.

The van, however, isn't an everyday minivan or even a full-sized van. It's a luxury vehicle outiftted with top amenities.

Specifically: It's a limited edition Chevrolet Express van upfitted with a Limited SE packed by Explorer Vans company "It's very luxurious," a salesman who helped deliver this vehicle tells me on the phone. "I'd rank it up there with the best."

The model being used to chauffeur Hillary Clinton around has a gray leather interior, heated seat, a 29 inch Samsung television, and a Blu-ray DVD player.

There is no refrigerator in the van. However, Hillary's model does feature an ice chest between the two front seats. (Which might have been used to keep her cottage cheese cold.) The middle chairs are swivel and quick release. Indirect lighting (like mood lighting) throughout the vans.

Oh, and there's a bed. The power sofa in the rear of the vehicle converts into a bed. But given the fact it's only a 6 foot wide vehicle, it might have been a little hard to get a proper night's sleep in it.

But it's not exactly great for the environment. It's a 2014 model all-wheel-drive that gets only 16-18 miles per gallon.

Indeed, because of rising regulated fuel efficiency standards, it's the last of its kind. Due to Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) regulations, they don't make them like this anymore. And 2014 was the last year one could get an all-wheel-drive van like this, the salesman tells me on the phone.

The customer, the salesman says, insisted on all-wheel-drive.

This is Clinton's third van from Explorer Vans. And while they had a 9 seater in the past, this one only seats seven.

"There's so much room inside this compared to a SUV," the salesman explains.

The salesman was not able to give me the exact price the Secret Service paid for the vehicle (as it went through a third party dealership) but guessed that it cost taxpayers something like $60,000.

John and Huma:

I recently had dinner with a woman (Georgia Demeros) who is very involved with Eugene Field School in Illinois, where the Secretary attended as a child.

Every year they have a big show, and this year the theme is Hillary (see letter and photos attached). The performance dates are in the forwarded email below. Georgia is a well-respected member of the Greek American community of Illinois, and is very competent and reliable.

This seemed to me something that you might want to consider... Georgia's idea is that the Secretary come out at the end of the show as a surprise guest. So it wouldn't need to be a long appearance, and she wouldn't need to stay for the whole thing, or be announced in advance.

All best, Eleni

Best,

In this complicated and quickly evolving situation, the United States needs to be clear about core U.S. objectives:

- Weaken ISIS to prevent it from controlling substantial territory from which it can become a threat to the region, our allies, or the U.S. homeland.
- Reduce threats of growing sectarian conflict sparking a wider regional war.
- Safeguard reliable and capable partners such as Jordan, Turkey, and Kurdistan Regional Government.

To advance these objectives, the United States should take five steps, none of which require the reintroduction of U.S. combat troops.

1. Condition additional U.S. assistance to Iraq on government reform and action to incorporate and empower moderate Sunnis

The United States has a major security and military cooperation package in place with Iraq's government to provide a pipeline of arms and hundreds of military advisors worth $13.225 billion in 2013 and 2014 alone.[viii] The United States has maintained a presence of more than 5,500 diplomats, intelligence professionals, military advisors, and defense contractors to support Iraq. In total, the United States and Iraq have plans in place for a major arming and equipping program that could top $25 billion total arms sales if fully implemented, including 140 M1A1 tanks, 36 F-16 combat aircraft, the Integrated Air Defense System, and Apache attack helicopters.[ix]

Prime Minister Maliki's sectarian policies squandered the sacrifices of Americans by not producing an inclusive government; President Barack Obama has rightly called for assurance that the Iraqi government will take actions to unify the country and reduce sectarian tensions. All further aid like additional special forces advisors and equipment should be conditioned on a unified, cross-sectarian response by Baghdad and commitment to greater regional autonomy and inclusive governance. Only some actions directly aimed at degrading ISIS and humanitarian assistance should not be conditioned. Maliki wasted the opportunity to bring Sunnis who fought against Al Qaeda in Iraq into his government and security forces and refused to sign an agreement with the United States that would have helped maintain greater American support for a transition. Today, the United States should not get drawn into sectarian clashes that can only accelerate the fragmentation of the country.

2. Inoculate against a regional war and crack down on regional support for ISIS

The United States should engage in a regional full-court press involving top military, intelligence, and diplomatic officials to persuade relevant regional stakeholders—Turkey, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, and even Iran—to step back from actions in Iraq and Syria that could lead to a wider regional war. The United States remains the dominant military force throughout the region, and it continues to provide overall stability in a region that remains the top oil producer for the world. Even after the United States redeployed its military forces from Iraq at the end of 2011, it maintained a strong military presence in the Gulf region, with more than 35,000 troops deployed to help maintain stability in the region.[x]

Last month, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel gathered all of the members of the Gulf Cooperation Council, or GCC—including Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, and Oman. He secured a general commitment to work together to enhance regional security, including overall measures to limit ISIS.[xi] One area in which these countries should take more action is cracking down on private financing that flows from some Gulf countries to terrorist groups such as ISIS—and the United States should increase its Treasury and Justice Department efforts to cut the financial links between the Gulf and extremist groups such as ISIS.

3. Mobilize regional stakeholders through diplomacy to push for a political solution

The United States should lead an intensive diplomatic effort to develop a shared strategy and coordinated approach to pull Iraq back from the brink of civil war. Between 2006 and 2008, the United States participated in diplomatic discussions involving all of Iraq's neighbors—including Iran—to help decrease the violence in Iraq.[xii] Now is the time for countries with influence over the Iraqi government, Iraq's religious class, and the various ethnic and sectarian communities to push for a resolution to the crisis that moves Iraq beyond Prime Minister Maliki's zero-sum sectarian politics. As part of the reported direct dialogue between the United States and Iran, the United States should emphasize that the sort of majoritarian politics Iran has encouraged in Iraq have directly contributed to the current security environment and will continue to pose a direct threat to Iran if they do not work to reign in Maliki's excesses.[xi ii]

4. Reinforce reliable and capable partners in the region

The United States should reinforce key regional partners such as Jordan, which is already coping with the challenges of the Syrian civil war and its attendant refugee outflow. Additional security and intelligence coordination and operations with Jordan, Turkey, and the Kurdistan Regional Government are essential, along with humanitarian assistance to help care for those displaced by the crisis. These partners have intelligence and capabilities that we should leverage to degrade the threat from ISIS. They should also be early beneficiaries of additional resources from the Counterterrorism Partnership Fund proposed by President Obama at West Point last month to bolster regional partner efforts to combat terrorism.[xiv] Any effort to degrade and defeat ISIS as a security threat and a political and ideological force will require a comprehensive counter-radicalization strategy to blunt the growing popular appeal of radical Islam, including the surge in Salafi jihadism throughout the region. The United States should focus assistance on regional partners that are willing to undertake reform efforts that can build more inclusive societies and that will undermine the ideology of extremists over time.

5. Prepare for limited counterterrorism operations against ISIS, including possible air strikes

It is clear that ISIS poses an immediate threat to Iraq and a possible terrorist threat to the United States and its allies. In Iraq, the United States should prepare for limited use of U.S.—and if possible allied—air power on ISIS targets to degrade their ability to further destabilize the country and to protect U.S. interests, including the protection of thousands of American citizens working for the United States inside Iraq. Strikes need to be rooted in good intelligence on the ground and will require prepositioning of some additional military assets in the region, including armed drones and personnel to advise the Iraqi government. Their utility will be in helping to slow the advance of ISIS and providing some time and space for Iraqis to regroup, but they will not on their own turn the tide. This kind of support is similar to what the U.S. Air Force did with regional allies throughout the 1990s and into the 2000s conducting Operation Northern Watch to ensure the Kurds could operate free of advancing threats by Saddam Hussein's forces.[xv]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Action against ISIS in Iraq alone will likely push the problem back across the border into Syria, where ISIS controls large swaths of ungoverned territory. This possibility requires more robust efforts to train and equip the moderate Syrian opposition forces that have shown a willingness and ability to fight ISIS and Assad, something CAP has called for previously.[xvi] The administration and Congress should make this the first test of President Obama's Counterterrorism Partnership Fund, using resources already dedicated to Overseas Contingency Operations. Details about vetting, the location for training, and the types of equipment necessary should be worked out rapidly.

In the event that ISIS comes to pose a credible and direct threat to the United States, we should be prepared to undertake limited air strikes against ISIS targets inside Syria. This would be similar to the air strikes undertaken against Al Qaeda and its affiliates in ungoverned spaces elsewhere in the world. Any strikes against ISIS in Syria would need to be driven by clear, actionable intelligence against a target that poses such a credible and direct threat. Given that ISIS has been joined by several hundred European and even some U.S. passport holders, preparations to this end should be taken now. As always, the president retains the authority to respond in self-defense to an imminent threat to the United States. While the threat to the United States does not yet appear to be imminent, the evolution of ISIS in Iraq and Syria may well require the United States to update the legal framework developed after the September 11th attacks to ensure any president has the authority to combat terrorist groups that threaten America with proper oversight from congress and accountability to the American public.

The Iraq War itself and its poor execution destabilized the region and facilitated greater Sunni-Shia conflict within Iraq. The United States should not undertake military action lightly and should be wary of unintended consequences. But not all military action is the same. Ground troops or invasions to control a country are very different from limited air strikes or targeted assistance to help push back terrorist extremists. Extremist terrorist groups controlling large swaths of territory in Iraq and Syria from which they could ultimately attack American interests or allies are worthy of a limited, effective response, including limited air strikes.

OCEANA Protecting the World's Oceans

Dear James,

Great movements are defined by how they respond to setbacks. They either fade away or return stronger and more fierce. This is one of those moments for our movement to protect our oceans.

Yesterday, the Obama Administration released a "record of decision" that will allow seismic blasting in an area of the East Coast twice the size of California—the same dynamite-like blasts that are predicted to injure and possibly kill up to 138,200 marine mammals, as well as harm commercial and recreational fisheries, tourism and coastal recreation–putting more than 730,000 jobs in the blast zone at risk.

There are two questions to answer: Why did they do this? And how can we stop it?

Why? Because multinational oil companies have billions of dollars to throw around, appearing to buy favors and spread lies about mythical funds that will go to coastal communities. But coastal communities and leaders are smarter than that. 16 coastal towns and 78 local coastal elected officials already have spoken out against seismic off their shores.

So what now? No blasting will happen without specific permits being approved.

President Obama's huge mistake

Stand up to help stop seismic blasts on the East Coast! »

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Today's decision only begins that process. We need to tell the Obama Administration today that we know their record of decision is severely flawed and, more importantly, we're going to be there every step of the way to stop all permits that threaten treasured marine animals and coastal livelihoods.

In the last year, you and Wavemakers like you have stood up for precious ocean life like the right whale—of which there are less than 500 left worldwide . We've seen new scientific reports confirming that these amazing creatures not only make the U.S. East Coast their home, but travel and live in a much bigger area than previously thought. Are we ready to start blasting the few right whales that are left?

We're just getting started. Take action today to tell the Obama administration that seismic blasting will be devastating for our coast and that we won't let it happen without a fight.

For the oceans,
Claire Douglass

He wrote, with the campaign staff, much of the energy policy in the primary, and he was one of the top two or three advisors throughout the general election. He is also chair of the energy and environment policy advisory group, which has several hundred people in it.

Happy to answer any additional questions.

Jason has been an energy advisor to Barack going back into his Senate work. He's done a lot of good work for us and run interference at times with the environmental community. That said, I don't see a need to cater to him in the transition process. Carol should decide how he would be used in the transition, but I'd expect he'd be in the mix for a decent position in an administration.

That's my perspective, but you should also check with Heather Higginbottom.

Don:

I have been reaching out to all of the folks who have been approved for my agency teams.

In connection with that exercise, I spoke today with Jason Grumet. As you know, I had not put Jason on my agency lists, on the assumption that he would be part of a central policy effort. I received word back, however, that we should ask him to co-chair the DOE team. I called Jason to ask him if he would be able to take this on, and to review the makeup of the team that we have assembled for DOE, as well as the other teams in the energy and natural resources cluster, since he has worked with many of these folks over the past 18 months.

We had a good conversation (Jason is a friend), but Jason made it clear that he is not happy with the proposed assignment. He asked about whether there would be some sort of central policy team in the post-election transition, and when I answered in the affirmative, he questioned why he wouldn't be on that, since he's been working across this broad issue area throughout the campaign. He was very pleasant about it, but he expressed surprise and some irritation that he would be asked to oversee a single agency -- DOE.

I assured Jason that there certainly was no slight intended, that the work of the agency teams is crucial, etc., etc. I gave him some background about the quality and depth of the work that the agency teams already have been doing.

But Jason wasn't buying what I was selling. He was focused on the fact that there is and will continue to be a central policy apparatus, and he didn't understand why that isn't where he should be slotting in.

So we have an issue to deal with. That's why I am copying Carol and John with this email.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I personally think that we should go back to my original suggestion and put Jason on the central policy team. It is a bit odd to have Jason, who has been Barack's primary energy and environmental advisor and the lead for all of the policy groups in the energy and environmental space, to be heading up the agency team for a single agency. I had received word back from Lisa that Heather Zichal -- whom I also had recommended for some overarching role -- is destined for the central policy group. That's the right thing for her, too.

Thanks.

-- David

P.S. I think that it's important that we close on this issue ASAP. It is not good to have Jason brooding about this.

I'm a lifelong Democrat, but I'm repulsed by the BDS movement that has become, in too many minds, a tenet of progressive orthodoxy. As extreme as the most conservative may be, the right wing is unswerving in its support of Israel, and shows no tolerance for anti-Semitism. I understand fully that the PM of Israel is an opportunist, and unsavory. But the larger reality is that the BDS movement, popular among academics, would be gaining adherents no matter who was PM. This is fundamentally wrong. It needs to be addressed as a moral issue and the Secretary, would, in my opinion, reap the benefits of being (as we both know her to be) unequivocally pro- Israel in voters' minds.

I think in AZ, specifics help. The immigrant and Latino community are much more plugged into what's happening here than in other states. Making the general point and citing this as a specific example of how anti-immigrant these proposals are is key for this community here.

The sentencing bill is extreme, but the reaction to kids is stronger. This is an attack on U.S. born kids because of their parents' legal status. More along the same vein as birthright citizenship attacks.

Two of them weren't voted out of Senate and the third is the criminal penalties for felons law. I think rather than name-check any, our strongest point is to refer to all three in the aggregate, as it demonstrates the return of the anti-immigrant movement in the state (which commentators say has been re-awakened perhaps due to Trump).

From the Benenson memo:

➢ That said, the mark doesn't wow these voters. For an audience of core supporters, the enthusiasm is somewhat muted and we don't appear to be generating the excitement or a sense of a fresh, new candidacy we had hoped for.
✓ Based on our experience, we would expect the mark to achieve a 20- to 25-point higher top-two box (NET 6-7) response on attributes, given that this audience is already on our side, and wanting to cheer HRC on.

➢ The bottom line is that we believe the mark will be a safe, relatively risk-free choice. It's unlikely to be a source of discontent or ridicule, but by the same token it is unlikely to inspire a strong, enthusiastic response.

Madame Secretary, Cheryl, John,
As I've discussed with some of you separately, we felt like we needed to get some other options on the table before choosing a final mark. I feel very confident that the one we have from Pentagram is a very safe and will do the work we need, but the testing showed an enthusiasm deficit. We also felt generally in our guts that it didn't have the "wow" factor we want. To be clear, we may never find a "wow" option, which is why we shouldn't feel that the Pentagram option is sub-par. That said, we decided we owe ourselves some other options and are going to task three other firms with getting us some new designs over the next few days. If we see something we like, we can choose to test it against the Pentagram mark or just move forward.
I spoke with Wendy about this plan this morning and doesn't think it's the right way to go, but was willing to proceed. I wanted to flag this in case she reaches out.
She and Teddy will be supervising the incoming creative from the other firms. She is also going to drill down with Benenson on the data we received since she thinks there needs to be further context on the enthusiasm measure.
So--that's the plan! Let me know if you have any questions or want to discuss.
Thanks,
Robby

Subject: Association of Flight Attendant's Hillary for America Fundraiser Chicago

Dear Mr. Podesta,

It was a pleasure meeting you last night at the Hillary for America Fundraiser in Chicago September 28,2014. My name is Linda Ulanski. I am the Government Affairs Chairperson for Council 8 (Chicago) and 21 (Washington D.C.), Association of Flight Attendants (AFA),representing United Airlines Flight Attendants. Here is more information on issues I brought up when we briefly spoke.

Currently, Government Affairs(AFA), through the FAA reauthorization process is calling for Congress to;

1. MANDATE TRAINING to HELP IDENTIFY & REPORT HUMAN TRAFFICKING

As aviations first responders, Flight Attendants are uniquely positioned to observe, identify, & report suspected cases of human trafficking.

In collaboration with the Department of Homeland Security U.S. Customs & Border Protection's (CBP) Blue Lightning Initiatives works to increase awareness of human trafficking in the aviation industry.

The Blue Lightning Initiative is a component of CBP's Blue Campaign. The key to the success of this initiative is the participation of frontline workers in the airline industry.

Blue Lightning teaches airline personnel to identify potential traffickers & their victims, in order to recognize & report these instances.

A training program tailored for flight attendants, which includes computer -based training modules & printed materials, explains the common indicators of trafficking that Flight Attendants may encounter & how to report suspected trafficking to law enforcement officers.

Training for Flight Attendants already exists. AFA is now asking Congress to make this training mandatory so we can all help abolish human trafficking on our planes.

AFA is working with Representative Dina Titus (D-Nv) to introduce a bill this Congressional session to mandate Human Trafficking Training for Flight Attendants.

2. FLIGHT ATTENDANT FATIGUE

In 2005 & 2007, AFA worked closely with several key Congressional leaders to have Congress appropriate over $1million for the FAA's Civil Aero Medical Institute (CAMI) to conduct a study of Flight Attendant fatigue. The CAMI Report concluded that fatigue was a problem and recognized several factors to fatigue, including shortened rest periods and missed meals.

FAA rest minimums provide a 9 hour rest. Small carriers are routinely taking advantage of a reduced rest provision which allows a Flight Attendant's rest period to be reduced to 8 hours. FAA minimum standards are meant to be a floor not standard operating procedure.
AFA urges Congress to adopt recommendations from past fatigue studies conducted by CAMI and also prevent airlines from disciplining Flight Attendants for requesting fatigue relief.
AFA's EQUALZzzz Postcard Campaign has helped to bring this important issue to our lawmakers attention.

3. MANDATE IMPROVED FULL EMERGENCY EVACUATION TEST

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Evacuation Test Standards are out of date and need to be updated to reflect the reality of conditions Flight Attendants experience daily on today's aircraft.

Also, through the Partnership for Open & Fair Skies, AFA is fighting to protect Flight Attendant jobs against unfair competition with government-subsidized Gulf carriers. The massive subsidies and unfair benefits that the state-owned Gulf Carriers receive are not only a violation of Open Skies policies, they create an un-level field for US Carriers & the ability to compete in the global marketplace.

Once again, it was a pleasure to hear you speak. Thank-you for your interest in AFA's issues and requesting more information on the subjects. I can e-mail you a link to the full CAMI Flight Attendant Fatigue study. I will also be happy to keep you up to date on our efforts to Stop Human Trafficking.

The 2016 election is so important!

Thank you,

Linda Ulanski

In case you get a question on what we're doing to engage Latino voters, here are some examples of events over the next few weeks. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Background:

The campaign launched Latinos for Hillary last week and will hold a number of events throughout the next few weeks.

The launch will coincide with Hispanic Heritage Month and will be used to energize, organize and earn the support of the Latino community.

In the face of a GOP field that promises to diminish the Latino community, Hillary's message will be that she will defend and stand with Latinos—because when Latino families are strong, America is strong.

The campaign will host a number of organizing activities, including an organizing event in San Antonio on Oct. 15th focused on Latinas and her personal story. This will be her first organizing event in Texas since she announced, and her second public event in Texas. Hillary previously gave a speech in Houston for how to expand access to the ballot box . Her connection to the community dates back to when she registered Latino voters in south Texas and along the Rio Grande after graduating from Law School.

Hillary Clinton will hold campaign events in Nevada the day after the Democratic debate, where the Latino vote is critical for the caucus and the general election. Rep. Joaquin Castro will campaign for Clinton in the state on Oct. 11th, leading up to the debate.

The campaign will also host a number of Latino house parties around the Democratic debate in key states like Nevada, Colorado, Florida, Texas and Virginia.

Hillary Clinton will attend the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute's (CHCI) 38th Annual Awards Gala on Thursday, Oct. 8th at the Walter E. Washington Convention Center in Washington, DC. Hillary has a relationship with CHCI dating back to her time as First Lady and worked to empower Latino youth. This is the largest Latino gathering in the country. President Obama will also address the group. http://hhm.chci.org/president-obama-to-speak-at-chcis-38th-annual-awards-gala/

Hillary Clinton will do calls with the National Hispanic Leadership Agenda (NHLA), which represents a coalition of the nation's 40 prominent Latino organizations; Congressional Hispanic Caucus (CHC) members; and Latino leaders and supporters. Hillary previously met with the CHC this summer where she discussed her policy agenda and issues important to the community.

The campaign will roll out endorsements in the coming weeks from community leaders, elected officials and celebrities, and urge voters to tell their stories through digital channels.

Director of Latino Outreach Lorella Praeli, an activist and a DREAMer, has a deep understanding of the community. She developed the plan and will lead these efforts in order to earn the vote of this key constituency.
Read more about her story here: http://www.makers.com/blog/be-the-hero-lorella-praeli

One of the first policy announcements that Hillary Clinton made was on immigration . Hillary also laid out her vision on expanding access to the ballot box and voting rights. She has also focused on other the issues that matter most to Latinos like the economy and education by speaking to those communities directly when she rolled out her proposals.

"Latinos for Hillary" will serve as a platform to highlight Clinton's agenda to fight for Latinos. Latinos continue to get short-changed on incomes, lag on educational attainment rates, and many live in the shadows in fear that deportation will tear their families apart. Clinton has laid out a vision to help Latinos get ahead and stay ahead, including:

- She will get incomes rising again for Latino families: On average, Hispanic households earn $500,000 less than the average white household. Hillary will fight to raise incomes for hard working Latino families.

- She will make college affordable for Latinos: Latino college students are less likely than white students to enroll in a four-year college and nearly 67% of Latino students who do earn bachelor's degrees leave school with debt. Hillary's New College Compact will ensure that cost is not a barrier for anyone who wants to attend college.

- She will make quality, affordable, childcare a reality for families: Nearly 32 percent of Hispanic women in college and almost 18% of Hispanic men in college are balancing school with raising their children. Hillary's education plan will provide childcare and scholarships to meet the needs of student parents.

- She will defend and expand the Affordable Care Act for Latinos: In 2009, 32 percent of Latinos were uninsured— that's higher than any other minority group. Today, under the ACA, millions of Latinos across the country are benefitting from stronger coverage and protections. Hillary will stand up to Republican attempts to roll back the law.

- She will fight for comprehensive immigration reform: Instead of breaking up law-abiding immigrant families who have enriched America for years, Hillary will offer them a path to full and equal citizenship. She will also protect and implement the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) and Deferred Action for Parents of Americans (DAPA) programs, and do everything possible under the law to ensure that we keep families together.

Jen and Kristina,

We originally pitched Univision on having HRC on the last show of Sabado Gigante, but they declined because POTUS was scheduled to be on their show. We then pitched a video instead and they agreed to play it as long as it wasn't political. They notified us right before their last show that they were overbooked and had to cut a number of segments, videos, etc., including ours. We came to an agreement that the video would air live during the show's tribute the weekend following the last episode, as well as during Despierta America (their morning show), and promote it on Facebook and Twitter. We felt like this was the best alternative.

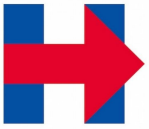

Let me know if you have any questions.

Thank you.

Dear John & Mary,

Yesterday was the 43rd anniversary of the landmark Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade that recognized the right of American women to make their own healthcare decisions.

Today we are still fighting to protect these rights in Congress. Together we can continue to work to improve the health of our nation and end playing politics with the health of our mothers, wives, sisters and daughters. Millions of people benefit from the services provided by Planned Parenthood – including a variety of cancer screenings for both women and men, HIV testing, and general health care services.

Will you chip in $5, $10, or $20 to my campaign right now so I can continue to fight for women's health and stop the war on women?

As your representative in Congress, I will continue to fight to strengthen healthcare for women and send a loud and clear message to those who would dismantle it.

I have always stood up for Maryland's women. With your help, I will take this fight to directly to Washington, DC.

Please make your contribution today.

Max-

Thanks for reaching out on Secretary Clinton, her comments with respect to the debate and her relationship with the financial sector services industry. From my perspective, these relationships have been formed over 2 decades from the Secretary's past roles as First Lady, NY Senator and Secretary of State and the real reason she is garnering so much support is she is incredibly smart and experienced on the 2 main key issues which will form much of the debate on deciding our next President: the economy (jobs, wages, income inequality) and foreign policy. For example, whether you agree with her or not on Too Big Too Fail concerns, she certainly has been the only one in either party to understand that AIG/Lehman and the entire shadow banking system are not bank holding companies and thus would not be impacted by going back to Glass Steagall. She has also been the only one to understand Dodd Frank and the resolution authority rules that came out of it and has been clear that if she needed to use the "living will" provision, she would. Thus, I do not think Wall Street is taking her comments lightly.

With respect to the 9/11 comments, there is no question that Wall Street and our local and state politicians came together and formed a relationship that we will always remember out of all having the same goal of rebuilding lower Manhattan and Wall Street back to being strong and vibrant. Whether it was Mayor Giuliani, Senators Schumer and Clinton and others, everyone put partisan political on the shelf for the better of our country. Even today, I have a soft spot for Mayor Giuliani even though I could not disagree with him more on his politics, so no, I am not surprised that many support Secretary Clinton from those days of working closely with her. Lastly, I should remind you that in 2008, many of the top contributors to President Obama's campaign came from financial services (maybe half of his top 10) and I am pretty sure that no one was saying that he was going to be soft on Wall Street or that they were agreeing with his hardened tone on regulation. So, maybe just maybe, the financial services industry contributes to a candidate based on many other things than his or her profession and may look many other issues as well like immigration, education or social issues and who is truly best to run our country ….I know I do.

Hope this helps,

RW

Mr. Wolf: Here's an important little note for you on this crisp Sunday. I'm sure you saw the intense moment last night when Sec. Clinton explained her relationship to financial donors by reminding the debate audience that she represented NY after 9/11.

It's a good moment to pause and explain why some financial industry folks appreciate her. Is it because of her New York ties? Is it her financial proposals? A longtime mutual respect? Or a combination? I'd love to get on

Dear John,

The latest polls show Kirsten Gillibrand's Senate race is tightening. I'd rather be up a few points than down, but we can't take one single vote for granted.

We're fighting a wave of fury and vitriol from the radical fringe. The Republican base is fired up and raring to go…somewhere - even if it's right back to the failed Bush agenda.

New York is no different. Now that polls show this race tightening, the other side will spend whatever it takes and unleash the lowest kind of smear campaigns to win this race.

It's up to you to help Kirsten fight back. Her campaign plan for the last five weeks is rock solid, but she can't execute unless she hits her $125,000 goal before midnight Thursday. It's crunch time, and your urgent contribution can make all the difference.

Click here to rush $500, $1,000 or more to Kirsten's campaign before midnight Thursday. Her ultra-conservative opponent has this race narrowing, and it's up to you to fight back.

Joe DioGuardi - Kirsten's opponent - ain't your dad's middle-of-the-road Rockefeller Republican. He's a die hard conservative who's just itching to privatize Social Security, and go back to the bad old days when health insurance companies could end your policy when you got sick.

Kirsten Gillibrand truly represents New York values. As senator, she's invested in job creation, protected the middle class from economic ruin, and made certain every American has the health care they need.

She's not out there filibustering change. She's doing all she can to get it done. When we send her back to Washington, she'll fight to put America back to work, repeal "Don't Ask, Don't Tell," and reform the filibuster so the Senate reflects the will of the people.

Joe DioGuardi will be Bush-Cheney, part 2. If you sit on the sidelines over the next 48 hours, that's exactly what we might get. I don't know about you, but the Bush years were a disaster for the America I love. We can't afford to go back.

Click here to rush $500, $1,000 or more to Kirsten's campaign before midnight Thursday. Her ultra-conservative opponent has this race narrowing, and it's up to you to fight back.

American politics has never been more unpredictable. If we stay complacent and don't do every little thing necessary for victory, we'll wake up on November 3 saying coulda, shoulda, woulda.

I'm not ready to give up that easy. Join me right away.

Sincerely,
Paul Begala

We'll urge them to support our fight for a more healthy, fair and family friendly America — and we are thrilled that Senator Cory Booker (N.J.) will join our discussion.

SUSAN KLEINBERG PARTICIPATING in PROPORTIO at Palazzo Fortuny for Venice Biennale, May 9-Nov.22, 2015

PROPORTIO is the new exhibition in Palazzo Fortuny during the Biennale di Venezia curated by Axel Vervoordt and Daniela Ferretti, en suite to the highly acclaimed exhibitions from the past Artempo (2007), In-finitum (2009), TRA (2011) and Tàpies, lo sguardo dell'artista (2013). Organised by the Axel & May Vervoordt Foundation and the Fondazione Musei Civici di Venezia, the exhibition will explore the omnipresence of universal proportions in art, science, music and architecture.

Proportions are present in the cosmos, in the natural world and in humans. It can be proven that these proportions are also favoured in art, architecture and music and determine our sense of harmony and balance. Articulated around a series of themes, including the 'Sacred Numbers', the Fibonacci sequence, the hypotenuse, Squaring the Circle and Le Corbusier's Modulor, the exhibition is an invitation to reflect on the dynamic relationship between order and chaos.

PROPORTIO will feature specially commissioned works by leading artists such as Marina Abramovic, Anish Kapoor, Massimo Bartolini, Rei Naito, Michael Borremans, Izhar Patkin, Maurizio Donzelli, Otto Boll, Francesco Candeloro, Riccardo De Marchi and Arthur Duff which will be exhibited alongside existing pieces by Ellsworth Kelly, Sol Lewitt, Alberto Giacometti, Carl André, Agnes Martin, Fausto Melotti, Mario Merz, Susan Kleinberg and Francesco Candeloro, as well as some Egyptian artefacts, a series of Dutch Old Master architectural paintings, a portrait by Botticelli and a monumental sculpture by Antonio Canova.

From Palazzo Fortuny:

The complexity of the universe has always fascinated mankind, which has constantly sought to reveal its mysteries, the origins and laws underlying creation and existence itself.

What is there in common between the arrangement of sunflower seeds, the conglomerations of galaxies, a Gothic cathedral, the pyramids, Leonardo da Vinci's drawings, the Fibonacci series and human DNA? A particular number, a geometric proportion discovered by the Pythagoreans, defined by Euclid and called "divine proportion" in a treatise by Luca Pacioli, illustrated by Leonardo and printed in Venice in 1509.

The irrational number, 1.6180, represented by the letter Φ of the Greek alphabet, is the symbol of the universe's harmony. Nature, art and science are closely tied. The multiple forms in which Φ manifests itself highlight the profound relationship between the physical world, artistic and intellectual creations and the beauty of numbers. The "golden number" in many ways says much about ourselves. Its essential dimension is evident when man places himself in relationship with all or parts of it.

From this premise arose the idea for the exhibition, which rounds off the cycle started in 2007 with Artempo, and continued with In-finitum in 2009 and Tra in 2011.This exhibition cuts across the centuries and different disciplines – thanks to an international academic committee formed of scientists, philosophers, musicians, architects, historians and art historians, co-ordinated by Axel Vervoordt and Daniela Ferretti – exploring that universal value which since ancient times has been the number of divine proportion (or golden section); a unit of measurement able to give all things their inherent harmonious dimension.

It has offered a fascinating challenge that has drawn in great artists from the international contemporary scene, invited to reflect upon and produce specific works on the theme of proportion. Their works, in dialogue with important masterpieces of other times, will go to form a visual and perceptive symphony capable of involving the visitor in a broad reflection about universal harmony and beauty.

Palin on Earmarks: 'We Did Well!!!'
By Mike Lillis 9/3/08 7:42 PM

Digging through Wasilla's municipal records is a lesson in the very essence of tedium. You've got pages of proposals to rename streets, assess sewers, build skateboard parks, buy lawnmowers, rent "pop" machines, carve snowmobile trails, congratulate high school football teams — the kind of stuff that makes small towns run, but leaves you glad that someone else is running them.

Every once in awhile, though, something pops up and grabs your attention. Take, for example, Wasilla City Council Informational Memorandum 99-62, prepared on June 14, 1999. This little gem outlines some of the state-funded projects that Wasilla City secured that year, including $1.2 million for storm water treatment and $605,000 for pedestrian pathways.

Then, slapped in the margin, former Mayor Sarah Palin — reformer extraordinaire — scribbled the following message:

FYI This does not include our nearly one million Dollars from the Feds for our Airport Paving Project.

We did well!!!

As Laura pointed out earlier, John McCain didn't think so. Indeed, The LA Times reported today that McCain was criticizing Palin's earmarks at the time that his now-running mate was securing them. It's revelations like these that can quickly erode candidates' maverick reputations.

The Georgetown Street Law Clinic is happy to invite you to our upcoming Mock Trial Release Party on February 5th, 2015 at The Georgetown Law Center in Hart Auditorium from 4pm-6pm.

The Mock Trial Release Party is an opportunity for us to roll out this year's packet in an interactive, exciting way for students. Performers will be playing the parts of the characters in the mock trial and revealing the facts of the case. After the personalities are briefly introduced, students will have an opportunity to ask the characters questions and get some insight on the issues in the case. We will be serving pizza, snacks, and beverages.

The Release Party marks the beginning of the 43rd annual Street Law Mock Trial Tournament. Each Mock Trial team will compete in two rounds of the tournament at which will be held at D.C. Superior Court on March 19th and March 25th.

John --

This has been a big seven days for Los Angeles -- here's what happened.

During my State of the City speech last Thursday, I announced an early finish to the 405 lane construction project, reforms for L.A.'s Business Tax, and no DWP rate increases in 2014.

Now, I want to hear what you have to say: tell me what you think about this agenda here.

On Monday, I presented my 2014-2015 Budget which brings to life the content of my State of the City address, focusing on the basics: making our city safe, prosperous, livable, and well run.

Here's what the media say:

> "[The] theme of his administration so far: focus on basic city functions, improve customer service, control costs and win back public trust." - LA Times
> "Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti released a budget proposal Monday morning that focused on job growth, making neighborhoods more livable and a reform of the police and fire departments." - NBC Channel 4
> "The first budget released by Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti seeks to reform the city's business tax while simultaneously boosting basic city services, like road repairs and library hours." - KPCC

Will you join the thousands of others who've shared their priorities? Click here and let me know what you think.

Thank you for partnering with me to build our new LA.

Subject: Story Flag -- LAT - WH Coordination

LA Times (Memoli and Parsons) are doing a piece at how the WH is dealing with the primary, given how it is taken a more competitive turn. They will likely file tomorrow (Saturday) or Sunday for Monday papers. We don't need to provide anything more here but if there is anything we want to push into it, we can.

To the extent they thought they might have to deal with an awkward situation in a Dem primary it was when Biden was still thinking about it.

The guns op-ed and the dust up that followed was what inspired the idea originally. So they are building from it. They have folks at the WH conceding that they didn't expect it to kick up the kind of dust it did vis-a-vis Bernie until we told them after it was posted that they would be drawing attention to it.

Halper got Podesta talking on this subject in the spin room. Podessta basically said that obviously he talks with folks at the White House but there's not been any coordination of activities or messages.

WH folks saying that because there are alumni in the campaign and they are friends, of course they chat from time to time. And sometimes the campaign will say, hey we're going to make a push on X. Something like that happened early in the year as the WH started leaking the gun push, someone checked in from the campaign to say FYI, we were already planning a guns event, too. But that they've stayed out to the extent they can.

FYI: They have been trying to track down the alleged Bernie one-on-one with POTUS. It seems like it was pre-campaign but the WH seemed flat footed in answering that Q when Denis got it on MTP and Josh later in the week.

Dear John,

Thank you to the thousands of grassroots supporters who spoke up for what is right and signed Kirsten's petition to repeal "Don't Ask, Don't Tell." This is not only a national security issue, it's a civil rights issue. Your voice will help Kirsten and Senator Mark Udall maintain pressure on the Department of Justice and move this process forward.

On a different note, with just 27 days left until Election Day, we're in the final stretch of our campaign. You're out there talking with your friends and family about why Kirsten is the right choice, and I want to make sure you have the latest information from the campaign, just in case you missed it!

-- Ross

P.S. In this political climate, anything can change in the last month of the race. Kirsten needs the resources to respond to her ultra-conservative opponent and mobilize voters.

Click here to rush your donation of $250, $500 or more to Kirsten's campaign. We'll put your money to work right away to make a difference before New Yorkers head to the voting booth on November 2.

DioGuardi On Choice

Joe DioGuardi is known for being radically anti-choice. NARAL Pro-Choice NY says that "DioGuardi opposes abortion even in cases of rape and incest. Not only is this view well outside the values of New Yorkers -- 75% of whom are pro-choice -- it is far beyond the national mainstream."

Planned Parenthood has released a great video featuring Kirsten's leadership on reproductive rights. Kirsten fought the Stupak amendment on the floor of the Senate and helped keep it out of the Senate health care bill. It wasn't easy, but we know we can count on Kirsten to do what's right.

Our Latest Ads

With ads running all over New York, our latest ads focus on Kirsten's work to grow the economy and advocate for veterans and military families.

Those who know Kirsten know that one of the reasons she went to Washington was to fight for the veterans who have bravely served our country and the men and women in uniform who sacrifice for our country each day.

And as the first US Senator from Upstate NY in 40 years, Kirsten is focused on creating jobs in every single community in the state.

There is so much happening - the fight to make sure that power plants drastically reduce the millions of pounds of toxic chemicals they release into our water, to confirm Gina McCarthy as Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Administrator and to tell President Obama to restore protections to drinking water sources for nearly 117 million people. Will you join the millions of Americans who fight for clean water every year? Click here to say yes !

The campaigns in Washingtonto protect clean water are just the tip of the iceberg. There are fights over clean water policies in state Capitols all across the country. States are debating how to protect families and communities from the impacts offracking and other sources of pollution, how to keep our kids healthy by reducing the use and emission of toxic chemicals and the best ways promote clean renewable energy instead of dirty, expensive, polluting coal power plants.

As a member of Clean Water Action, you help send a powerful message to our elected officials and polluting companies – telling them that more than one million people are standing up for our water today.

1)Monday interview w/ Andrea Mitchell in NH (w/ a Sunday prep).

2) Sunday interview with Andrea Mitchell (Saturday prep)

3) Monday avail in NH (w/ Sunday prep)

It's a good statement. Two suggestions.

1) I can see why you might not want to say who the turnover was to, but it seems to me omitting this may be misinterpreted and certainly will trigger another round of questioning. This may defeat the whole point of the exercise. The statement could be read to imply we turned over the thumb drive and server to the State Department—which we didn't ("There they go again—misleading, devious, non-transparent, tricky etc."). I would recommend saying "to the Department of Justice."

2) Maybe it's only me, but "hand over" seems a little pejorative—how about just "turn over"?

STATEMENT

I understand that many Americans have questions about the stories they hear on the news about emails and servers. As I said back in March, it clearly would've been better if I'd just used a government email account. Using a personal email account was a mistake, plain and simple. I am committed to doing everything I can to clear up any remaining confusion about this. That's why I've asked the State Department to publish 55,000 pages of my work emails. I've also repeatedly offered to answer questions before Congress and I look forward to doing so in October.

I hope the State Department and other relevant authorities will sort out as quickly as possible which emails are appropriate to release to the public. In the meantime, my team has worked with the Department to ensure these files are stored in a safe and secure manner. To put to rest any on-going security questions from other agencies, I have directed my team to hand over my email server, as well as a thumb drive containing copies of all the emails already provided to the State Department.

Going forward, I will continue doing my part for transparency and accountability. I'm also going to focus on what's most important to everyday American families -- raising incomes, making college more affordable, and helping families get ahead and stay ahead. That's why I'm running for President and that's what I'll be working on every single day.

Subject: RE: a few things for the PTT briefing tomorrow

Cutter may want to add to this, but below is a rough Q&A, but needs a once over from chris to make sure it comports with reality

Q: What is the lobbyist policy on the transition?

A: Barack Obama has pledged to change the way Washington works and curb the influence of lobbyists. During the campaign, federal lobbyists could not contribute to or raise money for the campaign. Immediately after becoming the nominee, Obama instructed the DNC to stop raising money from Washington Lobbyists. These efforts continue over to the Transition.

Federal Lobbyists cannot contribute financially to the transition.
Federal lobbyists are prohibited from lobbying during their work with the transition.
If someone has lobbied in the last 12 months, they are prohibited from working in the fields of policy on which they lobbied.
If someone becomes a lobbyist after working on the Transition, they are prohibited from lobbying the Administration on matters on which they worked for 12 months.
A gift ban, (is there anything different about it?)similar to the one in the recently passed ethics law is in place for the Transition

Q: There are clearly holes in his policy, how do you account for that?

A: These ethics rules are the strictest of any transition or any White House. The Obama Campaign took unprecedented steps to limit the influence of lobbyists and special interests, and the policy for the Transition is similarly unprecedented.

Q: Will lobbyists be able to work in the White House and Administration?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A: TBD (we need an answer to this)

Q: Is there a list of executive orders that Obama will rescind?

A: During the campaign, President-Elect Obama pledged to review every executive order put in place during the Bush Administration. The work for meeting that pledge has begun. But other than the executive orders that Obama has previously pledged to rescind, there is no list and no decisions have been made. The President-elect has pledged to run an open and inclusive government, so before he makes any decisions on potential executive or legislative actions, he will be conferring with congressional leaders on both sides of the aisle, as well as interested groups. And of course, any decisions would need to be discussed with his cabinet nominees, none of whom have been selected yet

Q: Is "so and so" in line to be X?

A: We are not going to play the Washington guessing game. There is a lot of speculation and chatter from people who don't know. So for those of you whose news organizations are concerned about accuracy, I would say speculate at your own peril.

Q: How is the Transition raising money?

A: In addition to our Federal money, we have been raising money in $5,000 increments and are voluntarily declining contributions from Federal Lobbyists, PACS, or corporations. We will also go above and beyond what the law requires by disclosing our contributors by the end of each month.

Q: What is the mission of the Transition?

A: President-Elect Obama approached me because he saw me as someone with experience in governing and a reputation for being able organize ventures like this one. He said that he didn't know if would win, but he knew that with two wars and an economy crisis that he needed to have the most comprehensive and effective transition ever in order to hit the ground running on day one and meet the challenges facing the country.

Q: What came out of the meeting with the White House

A: President-elect Obama and President Bush had a productive and friendly meeting that lasted for over an hour. They had a broad discussion about the importance of working together throughout the transition of government in light of the nation's many critical economic and security challenges. President-elect Obama thanked President Bush for his commitment to a smooth transition, and for his and First Lady Laura Bush's gracious hospitality in welcoming the Obama's to the White House."

Q: What is Barack Obama's agenda once he takes office? What will he do in the first 100 days?

A: If Congress doesn't pass an economic recovery package in the lame duck session, that will be President Obama's first priority. He's also said he wants to pass a middle class rescue plan, as well as pass critical reforms on education, health care and energy independence.

Chris , Todd & Michele, as you both know (Todd, you may not..) John is holding the first PTT press briefing tomorrow afternoon, 2pm we need your help on a few documents for his prep, and some for distribution to the press.

Todd:

Executive orders - a list of all the things BO has pledged to reverse, so that we can pull a few safe examples for John to use in the Q & A on that
(other than what they're running with now, stem cell and GITMO)

Michele:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

White Paper in-take - can you give us a few examples, from wide-ranging organizations as possible (rather than the usual suspects) of people we've received white papers from, so we can show we are taking the opinions of a wide range of stakeholders

Chris:

1) White House lobbyist rule - can you create a chart showing the WH lobbying rules from Clinton/Bush/and ours - to compare our, showing we are the toughest, most aggressive

2) PTT factoids - can you add to/update the one-pager you did for us on Sunday? we also need Bush's transition budget, and info on our fundraising
- how much we've raised.

we just agreed with him that we'd revise our reporting schedule to be similar to FEC, deadline Nov. 15 for reporting Nov 30th - so our first disclosure includes new, post election money.

We will need all of the above as early as possible tomorrow morning, is 10:30am reasonable?

thanks,
Sara

Emergency Stay of EPA's Clean Power Plan Denied by Federal Court

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit on Wednesday rejected a request by 15 U.S. states to stay the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA's) Clean Power Plan.

In a one-page order, the three-judge panel dismissed the request filed on Aug. 13 by a coal company and the coalition of states led by West Virginia's Attorney General Patrick Morrisey asking the court to issue an emergency stay to postpone deadlines imposed by the final rule. The states argued that the measure was critical while the courts determine the plan's legality.

In its ruling, however, the court said the petitioners had not satisfied "the stringent standards that apply to petitions for extraordinary writs that seek to stay agency action."

States that requested the emergency stay include: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Nebraska, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

When they filed the petition with the D.C. Circuit , the states noted that a stay of a federal rule would not be sought until the lawsuit challenging it is filed, which would usually occur once the rule is published in the Federal Register.

But the "EPA has made the unusual choice to make the states' obligations effective immediately," Morrisey's office said in a press release on Aug. 13. "Regardless of the date of formal publication, the states already have firm deadlines to submit initial and final compliance plans under the rule. Because it could be months before the 1,560-page rule is published, the Attorneys General believe court precedent makes clear that a request for a stay at this time is appropriate in order to prevent states from having to expend significant taxpayer resources to begin complying with the rule."

The EPA told POWER on Sept. 10 that it expects the final Clean Power Plan rule to be published in the Federal Register by no later than "middle- to late-October."

A spokesperson said the agency is pleased with the court's decision. "EPA maintains that the Clean Power Plan is based on a sound legal and technical foundation, and it was shaped by extensive input from states, industry, energy regulators, health and environmental groups, and individual members of the public," she said. She added, "To ensure that the Clean Power Plan's significant health benefits and progress against climate change are delivered to all Americans, EPA and the Department of Justice will vigorously defend it in court."

Under the final rule issued on Aug. 3 , state plans that will show how they will meet emission goals are due in September 2016, but states that need more time can make an initial submission and request extensions of up to two years for final plan submission. The compliance-averaging period in the final rule begins in 2022 instead of 2020, and emission reductions are phased in on a gradual 'glide path' to 2030.

This June, the D.C. Circuit rejected similar challenges to the EPA's proposed carbon rules for existing power plants, ruling that it does not have the authority to review rules that aren't yet final. "Petitioners are champing at the bit to challenge EPA's anticipated rule restricting carbon dioxide emissions from existing power plants. But EPA has not yet issued a final rule. It has issued only a proposed rule," wrote Circuit Judge Brett Kavanaugh in the court's opinion.

Experts are certain that the final rule will be challenged in court, and the outcome is uncertain. At a March 17 Congressional hearing , witnesses testified that states and power companies would still have to expend enormous resources developing and complying with state plans.

John -

I am sure you've noticed that PTSD has been in the news recently after Sarah Palin blamed her son's domestic violence charges on his deployment to Iraq. Even though her son was deployed to Iraq by George W. Bush, Palin decided to take this very serious issue, and turn it into a ham-handed partisan attack on President Obama.

Time and again, Palin has used the platform that she somehow has been granted to make ludicrous partisan charges. But to use such a serious issue, like PTSD, that too many veterans suffer to try to score political points is a new low.

It is time for Palin to treat serious issues with seriousness, or leave the stage.

Tell Sarah Palin: Stop degrading serious issues, or leave forever.

Ten to twenty percent of veterans who come back from Iraq or Afghanistan have combat related PTSD. It is a tragedy.

To politicize the matter by using her platform to blame President Obama is just absolutely beyond the pale, and turns what should be a serious discussion into yet another one of her political sideshows.

Hopefully this episode is the last the last time America has to hear from Sarah Palin, before her mentions are relegated to Wikipedia articles and YouTube comment threads.

Tell Sarah Palin: If you can't take serious issues seriously, just go away.

Frankly, we've given far too much attention to Palin, already, as a nation. But if she won't use the position she's been given to make a positive difference, she should head back to Wasilla, forever.

Thank you for making your voice heard.

Did you see Nancy Pelosi's email earlier this week John? The FEC deadline is in a little more than 24 hours. Missing it means Democrats lose and lose BIG. We can't let that happen, contribute now: http://action.thehousemajoritypac.com/PelosiNeedsUs

----- Original Message -----

I just left a meeting on the outside spending in some of our tightest races and it's downright SCARY. The latest numbers show that if we don't get a huge surge, we could lose BIG, even in states like New York and California!!!

But, that's where you come in. My friends at House Majority PAC (HMP) need your urgent support before their biggest FEC deadline of the year! HMP was founded after the 2010 elections to counter Koch-fueled attacks and provide Democrats air support. We need 3 more people from Washington to step up NOW.

If they don't have our support, President Obama and Democrats everywhere will fall behind. Look, can you click here and donate before it's too late?

If you've saved your payment information with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately:

If House Majority PAC misses this deadline, Democrats fall further behind to Koch-fueled attacks. They're already spending millions -- and could spend more -- donating today is the only way to fight back.

John, can you click here and donate before it's too late?

Thanks,

Nancy

Perhaps, hopefully sometimes after my passing away Mankind will conclude the impossibility of holding out suffering Drugs and Terror Indefinitely, then someone suddenly memorized the ex-farmer from Israel who had tried in vain exerting influence on US Establishment to eradicate Narcotic Vegetation getting Mankind be extricated from the doubling stricken Monster, Drugs And Terror Simultaneously. Then the Idea arose to New Life and hundreds of UAV got aloft attacking Narcotic Vegetation that Nine Eleven Murderers fed on transmuting it to Arid Gigantic Deserts anywhere within several days. Any way, President Obama on Termination of his Incumbency Tenure has Unique Opportunity of admittance into Great Presidents' Parlor provided indicating Exceptional Achievements for Posterity during his Service in the White House There couldn't have been any doubt that Narcotic Vegetation Eradication might have been reckoned as Redemption of Mankind from Crimes Committed against it Could that prophecy comes true?

John,

The matter I wanted to discuss with you was your possible attendance at the March 16th climate funders table dinner we are hosting in SF. You may know that Christiana Figueres is confirmed, but it would be terrific to have you there as well. We should be able to get a great group of people around the table, and we are certainly hoping to discuss how climate and clean energy will play in the 2016 election and beyond.

We'd like to send out the invites today, but if you will need more time to figure it out, we'll send the invites out without your name and we can let people know later if you can make it.

Happy to discuss at your convenience. 510-710-8269.

John--

We did it!

Today, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC) announced its latest round of Red to Blue races nationwide. Thanks to the help of supporters like you, we made the list!

This means that our race is now considered to be one of the best pick-up opportunities for Democrats in the entire country!

Only 26 challengers nationwide are on this exclusive list. Being on Red 2 Blue is a sign of the commitment of the DCCC and the Democratic Party to winning this race. Red 2 Blue is only the latest good news for our campaign. In just the past month, both the Cook Report and CQ Politics declared that VA-10 was no longer a safe Republican seat.

Voters in Virginia are hungry for change, and the Obama-Warner-Feder ticket is ready to deliver it.

We can change the direction of our country, but not without your help. We're challenging our supporters to help us raise $75,000 online in August to make change a reality.

Help us get there, make your contribution today.

Thank you for everything you have already done. We owe our success to the thousands of grassroots supporters like you, who are willing to do the hard work necessary to get our country back on track.

Subject:	[big campaign] From the eyes and heart of a teacher -- today's hearing

Colleagues: I hope you will take 2-3 minutes to read the testimony of Megan Allen, 5th grade teacher from Tampa, Florida. She covers it all – the impact of sequestration, impact of our broken immigration system, and the impact of violence on students. We are all veterans of many, many Hill battles, but this "real" story sheds light for all of us on what is actually going on with kids in schools today. It's one of the most compelling hill testimonies I've seen in a long time…..

Testimony of Megan Allen
Before the U.S. House of Representatives
Democratic Steering and Policy Committee
February 21, 2013

My name is Megan Allen. I am the 2010 Florida Teacher of the Year and a National Board Certified Teacher. But I am most proud of being a fifth grade teacher.

I teach at a Title 1 school in Tampa, Florida named Shaw Elementary School. We have about 600 students and more than 90 percent of them qualify for free and reduced-price lunch. I teach two language arts classes and have a total of 36 students. To them, I am Ms. A.

Let me paint a picture, showing you the faces of my students. Let's dive into what it means to be a student at a high-needs school, because today I speak for them.

Of my 36 students, I have 10 with special needs, who work with the support of an exceptional education teacher. They have disabilities ranging from Emotional Behavioral Disorder to Schizophrenia.

I have two students who are Haitian, whose families show up to every school event dressed in their best, for their dreams and hopes are placed in their children.

I have five students who are English-language learners, receiving daily support from a translator so they can better understand their academics and so I can communicate with their families.

I have two students with arrest records, one who is in a live-in program for troubled youth.

I have four 10 and 11 year-old boys in a special program for our most troubled boys, where they learn manners, wear coats and ties, and learn what it means to be a man.

I have five girls who receive extra support in a lunch group for girls with low self-esteem.

I have two young ladies who receive intense counseling at school, one because she is a rape victim, one because she is a ten-year-old with an ulcer due to anxiety about taking care of her siblings now that her mom has been deported.

Just yesterday morning, I had one of my girls act out and refuse to work. Upon a little prodding and a whole lot of love, she confided in me that she is a victim of violence, crying on my shoulder. Once she had told me, she returned to reading the day's Robert Louis Stevenson poem and interpreting the author's meaning. I don't know how she did that.

I have one student who is checked out of school every Thursday to visit her mother, who is in jail.
I have students who go to bed afraid because of violence in their neighborhood, who look to school as their place to call home. Who go home hungry on the weekends and look forward to two solid meals a day during the school week.

But most of all, I have 36 students who dream. Who have beautiful goals. Who see school as the lever to break the chains of poverty and achieve something amazing in life for themselves and their families. And our school is working to make that happen. Our students are winning county science fairs, making great gains in their student learning, and shining in and out of the classroom. Our students are moving towards greatness.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

So, how does that happen? Why is our school successful despite all of these challenges? And how do we help our students with these intense levels of emotional and academic needs?

We use Title 1 funding to provide our students with a lower teacher-to-student ratio, with additional teachers such as math resource teachers, reading coaches, and academic intervention specialists. These supports help lift our kids to their full potential, while helping me and other teachers make sure we are meeting the needs of every child.

We have more social supports so our students can then narrow in and focus on their academics. School psychologists, counselors, Title 1 teachers, and teacher aides work with our students in small groups, providing the care and academic support our students need.

Head Start and solid pre-kindergarten programs are vital to our success. We battle the achievement gap every day, and this academic and social instruction is one of our primary weapons. It is crucial to our students' success.

My students live in poverty and have special needs that federal funding helps meet — for example, keeping class sizes manageable so teachers can provide individual attention and support. For my students, a low student-to-teacher ratio is a dream lifter and life changer — essential if they are to realize their full potential.

To put one more human face on the looming cuts, I would like to tell you about one of my students. But remember that even though I share just his story, there are hundreds like him in my school alone and millions like him all across America.

My story is about a boy named Daniel. He was shy, started the school year with very low self-esteem, but blossomed into a writer I can only describe as "poetic." One day, toward the end of the year, Daniel shuffled up to me after school and said: "Ms. Allen, I have something special for you. It's one of my favorite things."

I knew that Daniel didn't have many material possessions, so I tried to decline the offer. I told him the thought was enough. But Daniel was having none of it. He stuck out a closed fist, slowly opened it, and unveiled ... a rock. "Ms. A.," he said, "I was thinking. School is my rock. I know I can always hold onto it, that it's always there for me."

That's when I realized the power and importance of education, school, and teachers. Straight from the mouth of a child, the truth hit me like a ton of bricks. School is the rock in this child's life, the one place he knows he can count on. For no matter what instabilities our students have, there is one thing they can depend on: school.

Daniel helped me realize that we are not there as teachers to only help our kids pass a test. That is important, but not our main purpose for this child or for any child. We are there to be the rocks for these children, to be the one stable force in many of their lives. We are there to help them see education as a vehicle to take them far in life, to help ignite a love of learning.

The looming cuts threaten all of that.

We may lose the momentum from the successes that our students are building upon due to massive across-the-board cuts — the "sequester." Those cuts are scheduled to take effect on March 1, just a week and a day from now.

In my school district — Hillsborough County in Florida — 142 schools stand to lose $3 million in Title I funding. On top of that, we'll be getting $2 million less for special education — the equivalent of shifting the entire cost of educating 1,500 students with disabilities from the federal government to Hillsborough County. Programs serving English-language learners — we have 25,000 — will be cut as well.

The impact will be harshest on students in Title I schools — like the one I teach in. Students like mine — my little learners, my Daniel — are the reason the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) was passed in the first place, back in 1965. As Title I of the law says, the goal is "to ensure that all children have a fair, equal, and significant opportunity to obtain a high-quality education."

Students like mine are the reason the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) was passed in the first place, back in 1975. IDEA ensures that children with disabilities have the opportunity to receive a free and appropriate public education, just like other children. It governs early intervention, special education, and related services.

In the name of Daniel and the 36 students that I work to nurture and inspire every day, I urge you in the strongest possible terms to stop the sequester. Think of what it would mean to them — and to millions of students just like them all across America.

Some say we cannot afford to keep spending as much on education. I say we cannot afford to spend a cent less. In fact, we should be spending more. We owe it to our youngest dreamers. Our learners. Economic recovery begins in our classrooms. Investing in education is investing in the future of America. The children of today are the leaders of tomorrow — our living legacy.

Thank you for hearing my testimony today.

Kind of platitudinous but no problems jump out at me. The Mandela riff is strong and useable for further occasions. Have you fact checked that one, for any Brian Williams exaggerations? Although this is not my policy strong suit, I think the new divide on sentencing reform is whether changes will only be prospective or can in some ways apply to the current incarcerated population. I think that is what is separating Durbin-Lee-Leahy from Grassley. If that's right, you may want to lean in on the Durbin side with a sentence. If you have time, it's worth checking in with Brian Fallon on that.

Califf the Obama nominee does have real ties to the drug industry - Chris Jennings is calling a few people for me to learn more so we don't tip our hand directly. We could certainly signal that we want someone willing to stand up to Pharma (in the same way Kessler stood up to Tobacco).

BUT - I want to do a little more digging and due diligence before we hit this guy. Having been through a nomination fight with my husband (in which he lost), this is personal and messy and horrible on the person nominated and their families - so I don't take attacking this guy lightly.

Do you want to do it on Meet the Press?

Also, as long as I have all of your attention - on Cadillac Tax - the general consensus is that we should frame our position as Cadillac Tax should be repealed but that we should tax people who make more than $250K b/c they don't need to have tax-payer funded subsidies. I have not nailed this down with HRC. Should I try to do that today if we are going to announce this on Meet the Press?

Hillary Clinton: Then and Now

by Lanny J. Davis

http://thehill.com/opinion/lanny-davis/245346-lanny-davis-hillary-clinton-then-and-now

As I watched Hillary Clinton deliver her formal announcement speech last Saturday at Roosevelt Island in New York City, I went through kind of a time warp. What year is this?

I remembered the first time I met her: It was in September of 1969, when she was an incoming freshman at Yale Law School and I was in my third and final year. As I watched the former secretary of State speaking, I was reminded again that, despite the passage of almost 46 years, she really hasn't changed very much at all.

I thought about our many conversations during that year in law school about the state of the country as the decade that was the 1960s was closing. I sensed that this was a very different kind of person. Clinton seemed to be able to look beyond all of the travails that so many of us felt regarding our future and our nation: assassinations, urban violence, the Vietnam War, the sense of a society and culture unraveling. She always spoke of doing some kind of public service when she left law school. She spoke often about vulnerable children who needed early education and sometimes legal protection from abuse and neglect. And I recall her remarking how in 1964 she had been a "Goldwater girl" and that by the end of the decade she saw that government needed to level the playing field to give everyone an equal opportunity.

Then, on Saturday, I heard almost the same words. Clinton answered everyone's question as to why she wanted to be president simply and directly: to fight for a "better deal" for "everyday Americans," the way Franklin Delano Roosevelt had fought for a New Deal. Like FDR, she sees government not as part of the problem, as many Republicans would say, but rather as part of the solution — but not the only solution, because every individual has responsibilities, too.

"President Roosevelt called on every American to do his or her part, and every American answered," Clinton said. "He said there's no mystery about what it takes to build a strong and prosperous America: 'Equality of opportunity for youth and for others. Jobs for those who can work. Security for those who need it. The ending of special privilege for the few. The preservation of civil liberties for all. A ... wider and constantly rising standard of living.' That still sounds good to me.

"It's America's basic bargain," she continued. "If you do your part you ought to be able to get ahead. And when everybody does their part, America gets ahead too."

Clinton's core identity, as I remembered her then and now, remains a fighter — for what she believes in, to overcome adversity, to press on undaunted. She promised to be a president who fights for everyday Americans — "for everyone who's ever been knocked down, but refused to be knocked out. I'm not running for some Americans but for all Americans."

Then there were the moments in the speech showing the former first lady's sense of humor, reminding me that while Clinton takes what she says and does seriously, she doesn't take herself too seriously, either then or now.

"All our presidents come into office looking so vigorous. And then we watch their hair grow grayer and grayer. Well, I may not be the youngest candidate in this race," Clinton said, "but I will be the youngest woman president in the history of the United States. And the first grandmother as well. And one additional advantage: You won't see my hair turn gray at the White House. I've been coloring it for years!"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

When she concluded her speech, I thought back to the first time I had met her, on her first day at Yale. As a senior, I thought I could offer advice on teachers and studying techniques and how to read cases. She demurred, but asked me where the nearest legal services clinic serving the poor was so she could volunteer.

As I walked away, I thought: Volunteering in a legal service clinic is her first priority? Rather than worrying about her first semester at a pretty challenging law school? Really?

This girl, I thought — yes, that was the word used in those days, girl — she is going places. She is going to be president of the United States someday.

I am not making that up. That is exactly what I thought that day almost 46 years ago.

And that is what I still think today.

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/robert-creamer/the-one-and-only-cause-of_b_2382245.html

The One and Only Cause of "Fiscal Cliff" Economic Crisis- Republicans Fear Tea Party Primaries

Often, economic crises are caused by real physical problems – like draught, war, demography, or technological innovation that robs one economy of a competitive advantage over another.

Other times, economic crises result when asset bubbles burst, or financial markets collapse. That was the case of the Great Depression – and more recently the Great Recession.

The economic crisis of the moment – the "fiscal cliff" – does not result from any of these factors. In fact it is not a real "economic crisis" at all, except that it could inflict serious economic hardship on many Americans and could drive the economy back into recession.

The "fiscal cliff" is a politically manufactured crisis. It was original concocted by the Republican Senate Leader, Mitch McConnell as a way to get past the last crisis manufactured by the Republicans – the 2011 standoff over increasing the Federal Debt Ceiling.

Theoretically, "the cliff" – composed of increased taxes and huge, indiscriminant cuts in Federal programs – would be so frightening to policy makers that no one would ever consider allowing the nation to jump.

Now, America is on the brink of diving off the cliff for one and only one reason: many House Republicans are terrified of primary challenges from the Tea Party right.

That's right, if your tax bill goes up $2,200 a year – or you're one of the millions who would stop receiving unemployment benefits, the cause of your economic pain is not some a natural disaster, or a major structural flaw in the economy. The cause is Republican fear of being beaten in a primary by people like Sarah Palin, Sharon Angel or Richard Mourdock – funded by far Right Wing oligarchs like Sheldon Adelson and the Koch Brothers. It's that simple.

Most normal Americans will have very little patience with Republicans as they begin to realize that GOP Members of Congress are willing to risk throwing the country back into a recession because they are worried about being beaten in low turn out primaries by people who do a better job than they do appealing to the extreme right fringe of the American electorate – and to the far Right plutocrats that are all too willing to stoke right wing passion and anger.

Nate Silver, of the New York Time's 538.com , argues in a recent column that one of the reasons for this phenomenon is the increasing polarization of the American electorate. That polarization translates in to fewer truly "swing" Congressional seats and an increasing number where Members are more concerned with primary challenges than they are with losing in a general election. He concludes that at this moment the number of solidly Republican seats is larger the number of solidly Democratic seats.

This, he argues is partially a result of redistricting by Republican legislatures that packed Democrats into a limited number of districts in many states. But he also contends it results from increasing polarization of the electorate in general. And it is due to the fact that solidly Democratic urban areas have very high concentrations of Democrats, where Republican performing areas tend to have relatively lower concentrations of Republicans. These reasons help explain why, even though Democrats got more votes in House races this cycle than Republicans, Republicans still have more seats in the House.

Increased political polarization in the United States is not a result of some accident or act of God. In 2006, political scientists Nolan McCarty, Kevin T. Poole and Howard Rosenthal published a study of political polarization called Polarized America: The Dance of Ideology and Unequal Riches. Their study found that there is a direct relationship between economic inequality and polarization in American politics.

They measured political polarization in congressional votes over the last century, and found a direct correlation with the percentage of income received by the top 1% of the electorate. It is no accident that the years following the second World War, a period of low political polarization, was also a period that economist Paul Krugman refers to as the "great compression" -- with robust economic growth for most Americans and reducing levels of economic inequality. In other words, it turns out that if you want less political polarization, the best medicine is reducing income inequality.

Of course, one of the other major factors feeding the GOP fear of primaries is that, because of the Citizens United decision, far right plutocrats can now inject virtually unlimited amounts of money into primary races. Unlimited independent expenditures have so far been much more successful in unseating incumbent Republican Members of Congress than it has been winning General Elections.

In the end, of course the relatively more diluted presence of Republicans in Republican districts – and the country's changing demographics -- may allow Democrats to win many currently Republican seats. What's more, Republican near term concern about primary challenges – and the stridency it breeds -- may alienate increasing numbers of moderate Republican leading independents. We've already seen this effect in the Presidential and Senate races and it would not be surprising that by 2014 many of the primary obsessed Republican incumbents are hoisted on their own petard in the General Election. Just ask Tea Party Members of Congress who were defeated in 2012, like Alan West and Joe Walsh. But in the near term, at least, there is also no question that many occupants of Republican seats appear far more concerned with primary challenges than they are with general elections.

If House Speaker Boehner is to be successful passing any form of compromise to avoid the "fiscal cliff" – either before the end of the year or after – he will need to convince Republican Members of the House that he is doing them a favor by bringing a bill the floor that can pass even with many Republicans voting no. That, of course requires that the deal is good enough to allow many Democrats to vote yes.

Boehner will get political cover for that kind of maneuver if a bill passes out of the Senate with bi-partisan support. But even then, he will certainly weigh whether he risks his otherwise certain re-election as Speaker on January 3rd if he acts before the country goes over the cliff at midnight, December 31.

Of course the many Republicans that will never support any form of tax compromise don't justify their position by explaining they are more concerned with primaries than they are of general elections. In fact they generally fall back on one of three myths that are themselves utter nonsense.

Myth #1 – You shouldn't tax the wealthy because they are "job creators". The plain fact is that no one invests money in any business if they do not think there are customers with money in their pockets to buy the products or services they produce.

Customers with money in their pockets are "job creators" – and the root of our current economic problems can be traced directly to the fact that everyday consumers are receiving a smaller and smaller percentage of the national economic pie and as a result have less ability to to buy the increasing number of products and services our economy can create. In fact, wages and salaries now make up the lowest share of the nation's gross domestic product since the government started keeping records in 1947. And corporate profits have climbed to their highest levels since the 1960's.

Over the last two decades, per capita Gross Domestic Product has gone up; productivity per hour of work has gone up; but the median income of ordinary Americans has remained stagnant. That is only possible because all of the growth in our economy has been siphoned off by the top 2% of the population.

And it has meant that everyday people haven't had the money in their pockets to buy the increased numbers of goods and services that are the consequence of that increased productivity. Stagnation and slow economic growth has been the result.

Henry Ford had this right. For the economy to grow over time, workers need to be paid enough to buy the products they produce.

If you want the economy to grow, the fruits of economic growth must be spread equally throughout the economy – if not consumers won't have the money to buy and, as a consequence, investors won't invest.

Higher taxes on the wealthy – including higher estate taxes on fortunes left to the sons and daughters of multi-millionaires – are not "bad" for the economy – just the opposite. They help address the economic inequality that is the core problem in our economy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Myth #2 – Our biggest problem is the federal deficit. This is just flat wrong. It is the economic equivalent of the medieval view that you should "bleed" patients when they are sick.

We have learned from centuries of economic history, that when an economy is recovering from a recession, the right medicine for sluggish economic demand is more fiscal stimulus – and in the short run that does not mean lower deficits.

More economic stimulus, of the type that the President proposed in the American Jobs Act over a year ago, puts money in people's pockets who can then spend it on more products and stimulate more investment. Austerity and reducing national debt will yield the same outcome we have recently seen in Europe – another recession. And that is exactly what the deficit hawks are likely to get if America slides of the fiscal cliff and stays there.

Right Wing deficit hawks are fond of warning that if we don't cut the deficit, the country could turn into Greece – or some other European country that can't pay it's bills. They ignore the fact that right now U.S. Treasury Bonds are considered the safest investments in the world, and interest rates are at a record low. They also ignore the fact that, unlike the Europeans, the American Federal Reserve can monetize the federal debt and assure that U.S. bond holders are always paid –- unless, of course, the Republicans refuse to pay the debts that we owe, which would be like committing economic Hara-Kiri.

In fact, the quickest way for America to become like Europe is a precipitous reduction of the federal spending. Ask the Brits how that worked out.

Finally, of course, let's remember that the way to reduce the deficit is not an inscrutable mystery. When Democrat Bill Clinton was President he did it, just a few short years ago. The recipe for success involved two factors: increasing revenue, especially from the wealthy, and growing the economy.

Today we would have to add, the need to control the spiraling increase in health care costs. While ObamaCare will make big steps in that direction, much more will be needed. Shifting costs to seniors and other consumers by cutting Medicare or Medicaid benefits is not controlling health care costs – it is simply shifting them from government to individuals. And what is needed is not more de-regulation of for-profit health care companies. In fact we ultimately need to follow the model of the Canadians – and most of the other industrial nations in the world – and provide a universal Medicare coverage to all Americans. Our system of private health insurance is simply too expensive. Americans, after all, pay 40% more than any other country per capita for health care and have outcomes that rank only 37th in the world.

Myth #3 – Government is always bad and– as Grover Norquist argues – must be shrunk so it can be drowned in a bathtub.

Let's ignore for a moment the fact that while Republicans talk about small government, they inevitably expand it when they control the White House – mostly in the form of larger military budgets.

Government, as Congressman Barney Frank says, is the name we give to the things we choose to do together—and that includes many of the most important things we do in our economy. From fire and police protection to providing free public education and health care for all, to building public infrastructure, to creating the Internet – government does a better, more efficient, more equitable job in many economic arenas than the private sector.

To hear the Republicans talk you wouldn't know it, but right now taxes are at their lowest levels since 1958.

Right now in America we need more government – more education, more roads and bridges, more mass transportation, more cancer research, more health care, more nutrition programs, more drug education and treatment – not less. More government shouldn't mean more regulation of our freedom – it should mean that when we co-operate together we have the ability to achieve more than if everyone is left to sink or swim. Government action is necessary to provide the foundation from which each person can individually excel.

The question of the type of society we want in America was squarely on the ballot in the election last November, and voters overwhelming voted for a society where we have each other's back – where we're all in this together, not all in this alone.

Progressives need to make all of these arguments to win the battle for the future. But let's remember that the unwillingness of most Republicans to compromise to avoid the "fiscal cliff" – or anything else – has less to do with their commitment to their ultra right principles than to the protection of their own political hides.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That being the case, there are only two ways to convince Republicans to compromise. One is to demonstrate that their obsession with primary challenges from the right will ultimately lead them to defeat in General Elections. The second is to defeat them so badly in the next General Election that they no longer have the power to impose the will of an extremist minority on the people of the United States.

Subject:	An important note from FitzGerald-Neuhardt Campaign Manager

Friend,

On Wednesday, Ed participated in this election's one and only debate... and John Kasich didn't show up. But Ed continued anyway because he believes that you deserve to hear the candidates answer tough questions, even questions we on the campaign may not like. And sure enough, Ed was asked about his driver's license. But in responding to that question, Ed said something that many people at the debate told us we should share with you. You can watch it here or read below:

> "If you run for governor they go through your whole life and they try to figure out the worst thing that they could say about you. And if the worst thing they can say is that I was careless about a driver's license and I let it become expired, so be it. That's the way that life goes and that's they way politics is sometimes. But I would just say this: If you look at the candidate [John Kasich] that didn't bother to show up tonight, which is also an indication of character by the way, and you look at his career outside of public office, you're talking about somebody that was making a seven figure salary from a Wall Street bank while advising public pensions to invest in that bank. And then, public pensions in Ohio lost hundreds of millions of dollars -- now what's a greater moral issue?
> If somebody wants to say that letting their license expire... if someone wants to say that that is a great moral issue, that's fine. But the fact is that people lost their pension money because of that and one publication in particular found it much more fascinating to talk about the status of someones driver's license than it did about [John Kasich's] really egregious behavior. And that doesn't even count the things that happened in office under Governor Kasich, which I think also have moral implications as well. I'm somebody that's been married for twenty three years. I have four children, and I have a record as a public servant of fifteen years. And that isn't what has been an issue, as to what kind of mayor or county executive I was. Because the strategy on the other side is to make this as superficial of an election as possible. That's reflected in all of their attacks, the fact that they won't deal with substance, and the fact that they won't even show up for a debate here today."

If you are able, please consider contributing whatever you can to help us share these truths to other Ohio voters and make this state go blue this election: https://secure.edfitzgerald.org/em_greatdebate?default_amt=25

NEWWAY FOR NEW JERSEY
PHIL MURPHY, CHAIR

John --

What's happening to people of Flint, Michigan is a tragedy that should have never occurred -- and it's a stunning example of how radical, right-wing policy harms people and our future.

Children exposed to high levels of lead may suffer irreversible damage to their developing brains and nervous systems, and it causes a wide range of health problems in adults.

Here in New Jersey, there are children in eleven cities with higher lead levels than Flint. Unfortunately, Governor Christie seems to be following Michigan Governor Rick Snyder's example instead of leading our state to a lead-free future for our children.

At the very end of the last legislative session, Governor Christie vetoed a bill dedicating $10 million to help remove lead from old houses -- and I hope you'll sign this petition and tell him what you think.

It's outrageous, and this isn't the first time Christie has stolen from money from the Lead Hazard Control Assistance Fund so he can claim to have balanced a budget. He's done it three times.

The $10 million fund is from a fee on paint sales in New Jersey, but rather than improving the health of children and our communities, Christie thinks that money is better spent on paying for corporate tax breaks that have failed to create robust economic growth.

Now Christie says, "If it's a priority for New Jersey" he'll put the money back in the budget.

I have news for Christie and his friends in Trenton: Protecting and promoting the health of children is a New Jersey priority -- sign the petition if you agree:

Actually, like this:

I still believe in the goal of a strong and fair trade agreement in the Pacific as part of a broader strategy both at home and abroad, just as I did when I was Secretary of State. I appreciate the hard work that President Obama and his team put into this process and recognize the strides they made. But the bar here is very high and, based on what I have seen, I don't believe TPP has met it.

I'm sorry but this is a pretty fundamental call. Are we saying she could support a better agreement? I think so. So I would prefer original first sentence - can drop necessary. And can take Mandy's second sentence.

> As I have said many times, we need to be sure that new trade deals meet clear tests: They have to create good American jobs, raise wages, and advance our national security. The bar has to be set very high for two reasons.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

First, too often over the years we haven't gotten the balance right on trade. We've seen that even a strong deal, like our agreement with South Korea, which President Bush negotiated and President Obama improved, can fall short on delivering the promised benefits. So I don't believe we can afford to keep giving new agreements the benefit of the doubt. The risks are too high that, despite our best efforts, they will end up doing more harm than good for hard-working American families whose paychecks have barely budged in years.

Second, we can't look at this in a vacuum. Years of Republican obstruction at home have weakened U.S. competitiveness and made it harder for Americans who lose jobs and pay because of trade to get back on their feet. Republicans have blocked the investments that we need and that President Obama has proposed in infrastructure, education, clean energy, and innovation. They've refused to raise the minimum wage or defend workers' rights or adequately fund job training. As a result, America is less competitive than we should be, workers have fewer protections, and the negative effects of trade are exacerbated. That means even a generally strong trade agreement may put us at a disadvantage. We're going into this with one arm tied behind our backs.

I still believe a strong and fair trans-Pacific trade agreement is both possible and necessary, just as I did when I was Secretary of State. And I applaud the hard work that President Obama and his team have put into this process. But the bar here is very high and so far I don't believe TPP has met it.

Say that Sanders is attacking HRC when he should be attacking R's, but if he's going to do this he has to answer for why he is ending Medicare and turning it over to the states and asking the states to chip in 14 percent? HRC believes that we should protect Medicare.

If she weighs in now, without viewing the document, some in labor might wonder why she didn't just say she opposed earlier? Subject: Re: YOUR THOUGHTS ASAP: Colorado Organizing Event

The proposal is an organizing meeting with some electeds. Our grassroots team has put a list together of the folks who are working in the various districts we need. As we discussed, the vision is everyday folks and the folks we need to start the work of organizing. We are using this as a training meeting as well as to make sure local/CO press know that we are meeting with community members and building what we need on the ground. As we talked about, we are not doing an electeds meeting because this will further harm the perception you were concerned about in our conversations. The vision is that the majority of folks will be invites from our grassroots team.

Jessica and Victoria are our key leads on this event. We will contact Mayor Webb separately but need our advance team to report back the numbers that are possible for them in this venue.

From there, we will put together the combo of invites we should have in the room.

Thank you for these names.

Team, we checked in with Gov. McAuliffe and he's hoping that tomorrow HRC will talk about 1) Health care, 2) guns, 3) all the progress they're making in VA; 4) why she's running or President. That's what I've done in the attached draft, along with a fair amount of GOP contrast. See what you think -- especially all you McAuliffe alumni out there.
Thanks

Hi –

Wanted to clarify my earlier email. The rally this Sunday in Somers with the President will be free and open to the public, but attendance is limited there as well, so please let me know if you'd like to attend ASAP.

The VIP reception and photo-opportunity with President Clinton is limited to new donors to the campaign, and space is limited there as well.

Please let me know if you're interested in attending either.

Hope that clears things up. If you have any questions, please feel free to call or email.

After Planned Parenthood attack, no calls to close churches or register Evangelicals

GOP presidential candidates incited against reproductive health group before Paris terror provided a more lucrative target.

Up until a month ago, Republicans had stepped up their ongoing holy war against Planned Parenthood. After the publication of doctored tapes alleging that the organization had been merchandizing fetal tissue and organs, Mike Huckabee compared it to heroin dealers; Ted Cruz said it was a criminal enterprise; and Carly Fiorina gave graphic descriptions of flailing embryos callously harvested for organs. Less than two months ago the GOP's Congressional caucus deemed the defunding of Planned Parenthood important enough to shut down the federal government altogether: this was one of the main impetuses for John Boehner's resignation as Speaker of the House.

Small wonder, then, that in the 24 hours after Planned Parenthood in Colorado Springs was turned into a war zone by 57-year-old Richard Lewis Dear – who killed 3 people, including a policeman – the Republican presidential candidates have maintained a deafening silence, with the exception of Cruz, who expressed sympathy for the victims. Unlike the seemingly endless stream of demands and condemnations that followed the November 13 terrorist attacks in Paris, no one has suggested that churches in which Planned Parenthood are routinely depicted as the devil's spawn be closed; no one has demanded that Evangelicals who believe performers of abortions are committing crimes against humanity should be issued with special identity cards ; and no one has called for arresting or deporting the inciters who exploit such incidents to whip up hate (and garner more votes).

choice of Planned Parenthood as a venue for his 6-hour long gun battle with the police was mere coincidence. The last thing GOP candidates need right now is for the rash assaults on Planned Parenthood to come back at them like boomerangs, or, even worse, for the political momentum that has shifted in their favor since the Paris attacks to suddenly stall. In the aftermath of Islamic State's onslaught in the French capital, the GOP has succeeded in shifting the public focus away from the ideological fanaticism and the bizarre presidential candidates that seem to have taken over the party and towards President Obama's perceived weakness in the war against ISIS and the promotion of the fear and loathing that many Americans feel towards Muslims in general and American Muslims in particular.

Planned Parenthood, after all, has been the target of violence and arson and even murder since its inception almost a century ago, much more so since right-wing conservatives promoted the organization to public enemy number one in recent years. And even though 26 Americans have been killed since 9/11 in terror incidents linked to Muslims in America, 48 have died at the hands of right-wing terrorists: The FBI consistently warns that home-grown right-wing terror is a danger no less clear and present than jihad-inspired assaults. And never mind the horrendous statistics of gun-related violence that consistently shock the world, including the fact that since 1968, more people have been killed by guns in the U.S. than those who have died in all of its wars combined.

Nonetheless, no one is under any illusion that anything is about to change: The U.S. is far from being the only nation in the world in which inciting against foreigners, especially if they are Arab and Muslim, is more worthwhile for politicians than lecturing citizens on how they must change themselves in order to face the challenges to their societies. Americans are also willfully blind to the obvious connection between their intolerably high rates of death by gunfire and the incredible ease of acquiring weapons and ammunitions. If nothing happened after 12 people were shot down in a cinema in Aurora, Colorado in July 2012 or after 27 people, mostly young children, were slaughtered in Newtown in December of that year or after nine African-Americans were targeted in a church in Charleston in June, 2015 or another nine were killed in a college in Oregon less than two months ago – it certainly won't happen after an incident in which "only" three people are killed. Especially when the venue for the bloodshed is a place that supposedly respectable political leaders have described as a hellish altar in which embryos are routinely tortured and sacrificed by godless liberals.

First and foremost among those who seem to have lost hope is Obama, who has made no less than 15 public pronouncements in the wake of deadly shooting sprees since he took office seven and a half years ago. After each carnage he has asserted that things can't go on like this, after each atrocity he has prodded Congress to toughen gun laws and after each massacre his anger and frustration are harsher and clearer than before. Perhaps this is one of the reasons – in addition to the Thanksgiving holiday – that Obama made do with a statement but no public appearance this time around. "This is not normal," he said, but it was in a tone of resignation, not defiance.

John, thanks for taking the time to give me a call last week while I was campaigning in Iowa. It's nice to see how much press interest there still is in Henry A. Wallace out there, some 40-odd years after his death (a packet of press clips is attached, as you requested). On my last night in Des Moines, I stayed over at the governor's mansion with Mari and Chet Culver (his family and mine go way back), who had only the most encouraging things to say about the outlook for Iowa tomorrow. I left feeling great about Iowa too, but, like them, very concerned about the effect of vote-suppression shenanigans and the race factor in close states.

I know you must have a million things on your plate, but as I mentioned to you, Elizabeth and Smith Bagley were encouraging me to reach out to you sooner rather than later about a possible appointment in an Obama administration. As you know, Christy and I have spent most of the past three years living in South Africa, where we essentially operate the African field office for the Wallace Global Fund. We went there in 2005 planning only a one-year sabbatical to personally review all of our grant-making programs in Africa and look for new opportunities, but ended up falling in love with the country, buying a house, and committing to more active ongoing engagement with some of the initiatives we had started or become involved in. I am passionate about helping South Africa achieve its full promise, and see its upcoming elections and the next couple of years as critical to the health of its democracy. It has become my second country, and I would be deeply honored to be considered to represent President Obama as ambassador there. I imagine that my service under Republicans in the Senate, as well as subsequent decades of working with Democratic Judiciary Committee leadership, should be of some help with Senate confirmation.

Of course, if it is determined that there are other areas where my background may be better put to use, I am happy to discuss them as well. I am deeply interested in the mission of US AID, from my first position in Washington as foreign policy LA to Senator Simpson , to my current foundation work on global development issues. And the agency with which I have the greatest operational familiarity is the Office of Justice Programs at the Justice Department. My full CV is attached.

If tomorrow's election goes as we all hope, the transformation of America and its place in the world will be the most electrifying and inspiring in my lifetime (and I daresay my grandfather would share that view, not only as a passionate multilateralist and believer in the positive power of government for the common good, but also as the first presidential candidate ever to run on a platform of racial equality). When the dust settles, I look forward to starting discussions with you or whoever will be taking the lead on vetting senior personnel.

All the best,

Scott

Dear Mr. Podesta:

By way of introduction, we have briefly crossed paths on a few occasions. I served on Samantha Power's transition team and attended several of the mock hearings at which you asked her questions. I also believe we sat next to each other at one of the sessions of Robert Blackwill and Ashley Tellis's CFR study group on U.S. grand strategy towards China.

I'd kindly like to ask if you might have time for a cup of coffee at some point in the coming weeks? As someone who hopes to improve our nation's public policy as both a thought leader and a government official, I've looked to you as a role model for a long time. I'd love to learn more about the path you took to get to where you are today.

Subject: You're The First To Know Our Latest Endorsement

Dear John,

We've made another endorsement for Congress, and wanted you to be the first to know. We're backing Bryan Lentz in his race to fill the seat in the House to be vacated by another one of our endorsed candidates, Joe Sestak, as he runs for Senate.

Bryan has a long and proud career in the Army, and continued his service afterwards. Bryan served in Iraq, as well as with NATO peace keeping forces in Bosnia and the Sinai Peninsula, earning his Bronze Star and War on Terrorism Expeditionary medal along the way.

But he didn't stop there. After serving with the 82nd Airborne, Bryan got his law degree from Temple University and went right to work for the Philadelphia District Attorney, spending six years helping clean up the streets by prosecuting gang members and violent offenders, while still serving in the Army reserves.

He went on to get elected to the State House of Representatives in 2006.

HELP BRYAN LENTZ KEEP JOE SESTAK'S SEAT IN VETERANS' HANDS

I know Bryan will serve the people of Pennsylvania's 7th District well. He's got the experience both on and off the battlefield to understand and advocate for the right policies to get America back on track, and keep us safe.

So let's welcome Bryan to the race, by showing him that VoteVets.org supporters are there to help him. Click on the links above to help his race out!

Thanks for all of your support.

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
March 1, 2015

Statement by the President on the Passing of Minnie Minoso

For South Siders and Sox fans all across the country, including me, Minnie Minoso is and will always be "Mr. White Sox."

The first black Major Leaguer in Chicago, Minnie came to the United States from Cuba even though he could have made more money elsewhere. He came up through the Negro Leagues, and didn't speak much English at first. And as he helped to integrate baseball in the 1950s, he was a target of racial slurs from fans and opponents, sometimes forced to stay in different motels from his teammates. But his speed, his power – and his resilient optimism – earned him multiple All-Star appearances and Gold Gloves in left field, and he became one of the most dominant and dynamic players of the 1950s.

Minnie may have been passed over by the Baseball Hall of Fame during his lifetime, but for me and for generations of black and Latino young people, Minnie's quintessentially American story embodies far more than a plaque ever could.

Michelle and I send our thoughts and prayers to his family and fans in Chicago, Cleveland, and around the world.

Dear MoveOn member,

All year, FOX has worked 24/7 to block President Obama's agenda—repeating lies about "death panels," promoting Tea Party protests, and whipping up fake political scandals.[1]

Now, President Obama is fighting back. The White House communications director said FOX is a "wing of the Republican Party...let's not pretend they're a news network."[2] To draw attention to its biased coverage, President Obama will not appear on FOX for the rest of this year.[3]

It's about time Democrats stood up to FOX! Can you sign this petition asking Democrats to support President Obama's stance by staying off FOX as long as he does? We'll deliver it to Sen. Kerry and Sen. Kirk and Rep. Capuano. Clicking here will add your name:

The petition says: "Democrats should support President Obama's effort to call out FOX. Please stay off FOX for as long as he does."

Democrats often appear on FOX in hopes of reaching out to conservative viewers. But FOX cuts off their mic, distorts what they say, or runs biased headlines at the bottom of the screen.[4] In the end, Democrats always lose on FOX.

FOX insists there's a difference between its news shows and its right-wing opinion shows with Glenn Beck, Bill O'Reilly, Sean Hannity, and others.

But in August, FOX's so-called news shows "aired 22 clips of town hall meeting attendees opposed" to Obama's health care plans and zero in support. CNN and MSNBC were more fair and balanced.[5]

In another "news" story, FOX passed off a GOP press release as its own research—typo and all.[6]

FOX executives now describe the channel as "the voice of opposition" to Obama's agenda. FOX president Roger Ailes—a former adviser to Nixon, Reagan, and George H.W. Bush—said, "I see this as the Alamo."[7]

But a Capitol Hill newspaper reports, "In the House and Senate, Democrats who pledged to follow the administration's near-boycott of Fox were hard to find, although many expressed support for Obama's stance."[8]

Democrats will only find the courage to join Obama if they hear from enough concerned voters. Sign this petition to ask Sen. Kerry and Sen. Kirk and Rep. Capuano to stay off FOX. Clicking here will add your name:

High Point Enterprise: Guest Column: Clinton's message resonates with millennials

By Andrew Barnhill

February 20, 2015 11:47 p.m. EST

Long before she served as a United States senator, Hillary Clinton's commitment to public service took root inside the walls of her childhood Methodist church. As a high school student in Illinois, Clinton began to learn that faith must be lived out through a lens of social justice and human rights.

Upon first hearing Martin Luther King Jr. when he visited Chicago in 1962, Clinton began to see the social and racial struggles that were taking places throughout the United States. As a minister trained in both law and theology, I see in Secretary Clinton a fighter for the marginalized, a voice for the struggling, and a comforter for the overburdened.

Secretary Clinton has also come to be one of our nation's greatest advocates for my generation, the millennials. As senator, Hillary Clinton fought to expand college affordability by introducing legislation to boost awareness of student financial aid through outreach programs. She also fought to restore the Bush administration's cuts to Pell Grants, and co-sponsored legislation to establish centers on college campuses to assist veterans.

I have the distinct privilege of serving as the State Director of New Leaders Council, which works to recruit, train and promote the progressive entrepreneurs of tomorrow — trendsetters, elected officials and civically engaged leaders in business and industry who will shape the future landscape of our state. Over and over again, I find millennials who are craving to be led by authentic public voices not afraid to share the faith that spurs them to social action. The millennials I know see beyond the polarizing reality that has defined faithful discourse for much of the 20th century. They see another way, a way that Secretary Clinton understands.

North Carolina is a state where people are not afraid to share their faith, and strive to reclaim the victories of the civil rights leaders who guided us forward. Here in North Carolina, however, we have experienced significant challenges to progress. Cuts to our university system, cuts to our public schools, and cuts to healthcare access have defined the past several years of legislative action. Secretary Clinton understands these challenges, but more importantly, she understands how to work with people of faith, including a new generation of leaders, as we seek to restore a commitment to justice and equal opportunity right here at home.

Andrew Barnhill is the State Director of New Leaders Council-North Carolina. He is the youngest member of the Executive Council of the North Carolina Democratic Party.

Dear John,

In an interview with Robin Roberts this afternoon, President Obama publicly announced his support for marriage equality.

This is a historic moment in our fight for marriage equality. We're getting closer.

It was not long ago that we passed marriage equality right here in New York. Now, with President Obama on our side, we can take this fight all across the country.

We know that President Obama is going to come under attack from some members of the far right. That's why I hope you'll join me right now in telling President Obama that we stand with him.

Click here to join me in telling President Obama that we stand with him in support of marriage equality.

Polls show that the public is on our side. President Obama is too. But you can be sure there are some who will attack him for taking this stance.

We must keep up the fight. Marriage equality depends on it.

Thanks,

Kirsten

Huma,

Hope you are feeling well. I wanted to touch base with you and set up a call for this week – a meeting would be great but if not at least a call – to discuss space. As you may know from the traffic btw Chelsea and I last week which included Bruce and Podesta, I had a meeting and walk through for the additional space available at 77 Water Street. They have an interested party (who today just asked for a draft lease – so that is moving quickly) on the table for part of the space so if we want additional space, we need to move quickly. Goldman, b/c of their relationship with us, is delaying the drafting of a lease for this interested party until they get a better sense from us but they cannot hold them off too much longer. I briefed John this am and then he and I met with Bob regarding CGI needs. It would be great if we could arrange a call to discuss the Secretary's needs for this week and I can have John and/or Bob join as needed. Michelle is copied here for follow up on setting a time for a meeting or call at your convenience. In meantime, Genzler via Goldman Sachs is awaiting our details to do test fit options. One Wisconsin Now Files Federal Elections Commission Complaint Against Rep. Paul Ryan

Asks for Determination Ryan Improperly Using Congressional Campaign Funds to Boost GOP Presidential Ticket in Key Swing State

Madison -- One Wisconsin Now today filed a complaint with the Federal Elections Commission alleging U.S. Representative and GOP Vice Presidential candidate Paul Ryan is improperly using Congressional campaign funds to boost the Republican Presidential ticket. Ryan, who has claimed he has a 25-point lead in the U.S. House race according to a poll released by his campaign, is pouring at least $2 million into television ads, in which the candidate never mentions he is running for Congress, in the two largest media markets in the state.

“Wisconsin is widely considered to be a key swing state in the presidential election, and many pundits and political observers viewed the selection of Ryan as an attempt to boost the GOP campaign here. I don’t think they had in mind Ryan would possibly violate federal campaign finance laws to do it,” commented One Wisconsin Now Executive Director Scot Ross.

According to the FEC’s 2011 publication Congressional Candidates and Committees, “No transfers of funds or assets may be made between a candidate’s separate campaign committees while the candidate is 'actively seeking' more than one office at the same time. 110.3(c)(5) and 110.8(d)(2).”

Ross said, “It’s perfectly legal for Paul Ryan to run for Congress and Vice-President at the same time. But he crosses a legal line if, as it appears with his television ads, he uses congressional campaign funds to promote his run on the GOP presidential ticket.”

In the complaint filed with the FEC, One Wisconsin Now noted that:

- The $2 million television ad buy in the two largest media markets in Wisconsin roughly double the largest amount spent on TV ads by the campaign over the last decade;
- Ryan is making this buy despite the district being made considerably “safer” for Republicans after redistricting and after releasing of a poll commissioned by the campaign reporting Ryan held a 25 point (58-33) advantage; and
- In none of the five ads released to date by the campaign, all featuring Congressman Ryan talking to the camera, does the candidate mention he is currently a U.S. Representative, running for re-election to that office or make an appeal to voters for their support in his election for U.S. Representative.

Ross concluded, “The tactics employed by Ryan with his television advertising are totally consistent with the entire Romney-Ryan campaign strategy saying one thing, like ‘protecting’ Medicaid or creating opportunity for the middle class, while the truth is decidedly different and destructive to the middle class.”

A copy of the letter sent to the Federal Election Commission Wednesday by One Wisconsin Now, is available here .

The OCR has been quite clear that complainants cannot be asked to abide by any form of confidentiality agreement, so I do not know if she or her friends will go public. While we are not making any details of the case public, the case differs from many of those that y ou are reading about in the media in which the university failed to take action upon receiving a report. In this case, the complainant reported the incident to the College and it was adjudicated through our process. It will, of course, be up to the OCR to determine whether the College response was adequate but our attorney feels that all we have done in recent months will stand up well to OCR scrutiny .

Subject: America welcomes refugees

Leahy for Vermont

John,

The wrong response to the senseless attacks in Paris is to shut our doors to admitting Syrian refugees now, while the world's worst humanitarian crisis rages.

This morning I stood on the Senate floor and spoke out against a proposal that Senate Republican Ted Cruz introduced to block Syrian refugees from America. Proposals like this one come from a place of hatred and fear. They do not represent our country.

Vermonters and Americans across this country stand shoulder to shoulder in solidarity with the people of France after these atrocious acts of barbarism. What the terrorists attacked in France was liberty, freedom, and tolerance -- the very same ideals upon which our own country was founded.

We must debate our response to ISIS -- our real enemy -- and not shut our doors to those refugees fleeing from ISIS's terror in Syria, who all go through a careful and thorough screening process before entering the United States.

I stand with President Obama today in affirming that our country welcomes Syrian refugees.

These are American values. Do you agree? Please, join me in adding your name to ours and join the movement of Americans calling for compassion for refugees.

We must recommit ourselves to ridding the world of ISIS's radical ideology, using every lawful law enforcement, military, and diplomatic tool at our disposal, in concert with our allies around the world.

But we must always draw the clear distinction between our real enemy, ISIS, and the refugees who are fleeing from ISIS's reign of terror.

It is our responsibility as Americans to do the right thing. Welcoming refugees is the right thing.

Please, sign here if you agree that we need to welcome refugees -- not demonize them.

Thank you for standing with President Obama, my progressive colleagues, and me on this important and timely issue.

Sincerely,

Patrick Leahy
U.S. Senator

Our mothers and sisters and daughters are on the frontlines of all these battles. But these aren't women's fights. They're America's fights. We have to take them on together. And win them together.

Yet there are those who offer themselves as leaders of our country who take a different view.

They look the other way when bosses pay women less and then block laws to fix it.

They vote to defund Planned Parenthood and to let health insurance companies once again charge women more just because of their gender.

They'd rather deport mothers – even mothers of American citizens – than risk the ire of talk radio.

Maybe some of them will go to a gay wedding, but they're all too quick to embrace discriminatory laws in places like Indiana and Arkansas.

They even play politics with victims of human trafficking.

This isn't the way to move America forward. It isn't leadership. And it's not going to create a single job, raise anyone's wages, or strengthen our families...

Hi John,

I joined a phone bank last night calling Virginia voters – nearly all of my electronic call sheets were for people over 60, with many in their late 80s and 90s. It caused me to have another sleepless night, anxious about the campaign.

I'm wondering if there's something more I can do to help?

I'd be thrilled to join your cast of surrogates, and I have the kind of job that gives me great flexibility (indeed, it was upon your wise counsel that I put myself on ice at a university for a while).

I'm particularly good with young people. When I was Deputy, I organized a 'college tour' and visited nearly 50 campuses for keynote type speeches over my four years. It wasn't anything that I was asked to do – I believed it was critical to maintain youthful energy for the 2012 election and this was my way of contributing.

My public narrative is that I'm anti-establishment, whether it's from writing the organic law, leading the Know Your Farmer, Know Your Food effort at USDA, or from many other efforts. My guess is that I'm an appealing character for the kind of people energized by Bernie, but who could be steered, with the right approach, to the "progressive who gets things done.'

College campuses, environmental groups, foodies, women, anything to do with sustainability – I'm sure I could walk into a room and be an effective speaker for our common cause. Colorado, Texas, Virginia, Maine – all places where I've done considerable speaking. I'm scheduled to be in CA twice in the next month, NY once, NJ too – at Rutgers. And of course, I hail from Massachusetts.

Well, I feel better just by making the offer. My now 17 year old daughter Fiona and I were up in snowy Manchester NH in 2008 working for Hillary and she was with me at the phone bank last night. We are passionate about this race and will do whatever it takes.

I hope you are doing okay, whether this note finds you in snowy DC today or up in Brooklyn. I am deeply grateful for your leadership and if anything gives me confidence that all will be okay in this election, it is because you are at the helm.

Best,

Subject: Meaning of "all deliberate haste " in announcing nominations

I have spoken with each of you about the timing of announcements and thoroughness of vetting. I think there is value in laying out the process in writing so you can [] make decisions regarding when to contact potential nominees and get them started as well as when to plan announcements.

From the time we tell an individual that they are under consideration and get them the necessary paperwork it is a minimum of 10 days to do a deep dive IF we get the individual's paperwork and documents back in the first 24-48 hours. Some individuals can do this - good staffing, lack of complexity etc - but those individuals are the exception not the rule. More realistically, it will take individuals 3 to 4 days to pull together all the paperwork and complete all the forms. Thus, our own deep dive, if the individuals get us everything in 3 to 4 days, is a 11-12 day process. Although we have several people in "pre-deep dive" and teams up and running and doing as much as they can to hasten the process prior to notifying the individual, there is an enormous amount of work that simply cannot be done prior to receiving forms and documents from the individual.

The FBI begins the background check on an individual as soon as the individual completes and submits the SF86. The interims we have done thus far do not short-circuit the time a background takes by much, The value of the background comes from the FBI conducting up to 30 interviews and verifying information at the source such as educational degrees, divorce decrees, child support payments, etc. The FBI has previously told us that a background check takes 30 days, but they could get it down to 20. I am pressing the FBI to move faster and am pressing them to notify us immediately if they find a problem. The FBI has done interim checks on Rice, Steinberg and Napolitano. They will move to the full background next, assuming the MOU has been signed. We are putting Geithner, Orszag and Jones directly into full background. (Emanual already announced so not as relevant to our timing issues.) As of today, none of these three have completed and submitted all their forms.

At this point, it is safe to say the only people that will have had or will be close to having had a complete vet by early next week are Napolitano, Rice, Steinberg, Geithner, Orszag and Jones - assuming the last three get us all their paperwork Monday or Tuesday of this week. None of them will have had a full FBI background check.

We have several teams doing a pre-deep dive on the following people Holder, Blair, Lew, Locke, Tyson, Wright, Donovan and Daschle. None of them have been contacted to get the paperwork or FBI started.

So, I think this situation leaves us with a couple of choices/realities:

1. Announce ASAP, prior to completion of a full vet: This may be a risk we are willing to take. It's true we can find out a good deal of information from the public record, a proprietary data base check (court records, BLJ, credit records, etc), a tax check, our own interview with the individual and checking their references. However, depending on the time alloted, we are likely to have to short-circuit some elements of the process that's been developed, including forgoing some or all of the subject's production of source documents.

2. Contact individuals and put them in the deep dive before they are selected: We could put several people in the deep dive knowing that some of them will not be offered a position in the cabinet. This would allow us to start the process while the deliberations continue and could get us closer to the time we need. The negatives here include spreading information we prefer to hold close, raising expectations, creating opportunities for lobbying campaigns etc. That said, this seems a desirable approach for some individuals with whom these concerns are not as acute.

3. No announcements until deep dives are fully complete: Probably not a realistic option for National Security and Economics, but could be for the rest.

We need to decide if we are okay with the risk outlined in 1, if we want to do some of 2, and if 3 is realistic for everything else. Perhaps we should discuss tomorrow when Mike is here.

Subject: President Romney?

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John,

With only 12 days to go, the race to the White House continues to tighten. As hard as it is for me to imagine, we are now facing the real possibility of a Romney-Ryan administration. I don't have to tell you how devastating this would be for the environmental movement for many years to come.

Mitt Romney is so cozy with big polluters that he's not only pledged to slash support for clean energy and weaken basic safeguards for our air and water, he's made a punch line out of the incredibly urgent issue of addressing climate change. We simply have to stop him.

Thanks to your steadfast support, LCV is now running a highly effective and targeted voter mobilization campaign in some of the tightest races in the country. With 23 full time organizers on the ground, we are infusing the Obama for America campaign with thousands of volunteers in key battleground states: Colorado, Florida, Nevada, Ohio, Virginia and Wisconsin. More than 10,000 LCV members have already pledged to volunteer to knock on doors or make phone calls, and the numbers grow every day.

With deep appreciation,

Gene

Montana U.S. Senate Race Remains Close

We now know our work in Montana for Senator Jon Tester has struck a nerve with those at the National Republican Senatorial Committee. Late last week, they launched this ad to attack Senator Tester for receiving the support of the League of Conservation Voters.

There is no doubt about it. We want Senator Jon Tester to be re-elected in Montana, and we are working hard on the ground, in the mail, and through the airwaves to make sure that happens. We have partnered closely with Montana Hunters and Anglers Action on their hard-hitting TV ads against Rehberg, as well as launched an unprecedented field program that will help put Tester over the top.

Already this year, LCV has recruited nearly 25,000 Tester supporters to vote by mail, many of whom are sporadic voters. We have now shifted our focus to turning out these Tester voters on election day. In a race that has remained close for months (Senator Tester is currently ahead 46% to 44% according to the latest polling), and where the airwaves have been saturated by Koch brother ads, LCV's strong field program should make a major difference in what is certain to be one of the closest races in the country.

New York Times Endorses Dan Maffei

A week after launching our new $200,000 television ad campaign against "Flat Earth Five" member Rep. Ann Marie Buerkle (NY-24) for her extreme environmental voting record, the New York Times endorsed Dan Maffei in his election rematch.

In the endorsement, the New York Times specifically used our "Flat Earth Five" designation as a reason why Rep. Ann Marie Buerkle should be defeated.

"All that voters really need to know is that their conservative Republican congresswoman, Ann Marie Buerkle, was named one of the "Flat Earth Five" by the League of Conservation Voters," the newspaper's editorial said. "She won this title for denying the existence of global warming."

More information about the Flat Earth Five can be found at http://www.lcv.org/flatearthfive .

Subject: VIDEO: Sarah Palin's "Flat Earth" Friends

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

"I absolutely do not believe in the science of man-caused climate change. It's not proven by any stretch of the imagination. It's far more likely that it's just sunspot activity…"

- Ron Johnson, Wisconsin Senate Candidate

Dear John,

Why are people like Sarah Palin, the Tea Party and their endorsed candidates rejecting the sound and settled science of climate change?

Do they think the earth is flat too? Maybe it's time to change the name of the Tea Party to the Flat Earth Party. Their extremist views are both ridiculous and scary.

Check out LCV's new video and see their extremist views for yourself: www.flatearth.tv

In any other election year, these "Flat Earthers" would be merely fringe candidates. But this year, most of the Republican candidates running for U.S. Senate are full-fledged global warming deniers. Worse, many of these climate skeptics are running neck-and-neck with our clean energy champions. There's a good chance that some – or even all of them – could win if we don't act now. For example, in Wisconsin, Senator Russ Feingold is running just one-point ahead in his race against Ron "Sunspots" Johnson and in Nevada, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid is running even in his race with Tea Party activist and climate change denier Sharron Angle.

I honestly fear for the future of our planet if either of these extremists wins in November. But Ron Johnson and Sharron Angle are both just the tip of a fast melting iceberg. Climate change deniers are locked in close Senate races with environmental leaders in states like California, Colorado, Missouri and New Hampshire. Over the next six weeks, we need every environmental voter to stand up and help us take on these extremists.

So please do three things for me right now:

1) Take two minutes and watch our new video . You'll be both amused – and appalled – by it.

2) After you watch the video, please take our pledge . We're asking you to vote only for those candidates who agree that climate change is sound and settled science.

3) After you take the pledge, please tell a friend or two about the video . We can only win in November if we can get thousands of people to watch the video and sign the pledge.

Bottom line: If we want to continue fighting for climate policies next year, we need to defeat these climate deniers this year. We can't afford to let the "Flat Earthers" ascend to the U.S. Senate. Now is the time to stand opposed to these global warming deniers and stand up for a clean energy future.

Thank you for your help and thank you for spreading the word about LCV's video.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski
President

Let's continue to explore moving the Harlem staff downtown. One option might be to move Clinton Executive Service employees to Harlem, but we don't need to make that decision now.

I agree with your recommendation on #1.

Hope you are recovering well and feeling better. I keep you and Hallie in my thoughts and prayers daily. I am hoping that I can get a yes or no from you on how to move forward re: below 2 questions.

John – if you have any guidance otherwise please advise. This is an update from our last conversation. Unfortunately question 1 cannot await your return from China.

Question 1
This building has approx 23k rentable square feet available on floor 2 but as John knows, they need to know today if we are serious about taking all 25k b/c they have a serious offer for part of the floor. This is the only available space in the building. After meeting and receiving guidance from Huma last night that HRC is not prepared to commit to a big footprint within CF water street and is unsure whether she will need anything but a possible small footprint of office space at Water Street, I recommend the following:

a. We let Goldman move forward with their serious tenant to take approximately 8000 rentable square feet on 2 b/c without a big footprint for HRC we cannot use the entire floor.
b. We ask Goldman to give us first rights to consider the remaining approximately 15000 rentable square feet on 2 while we discuss our expansion needs (including but not limited to a possible small footprint for HRC). I will put together a memo that outlines what I believe to be our growth needs + a possible small footprint for HRC that Huma and I discussed to help inform this decision.

Can I proceed as recommended above?

Question 2
CVC, BC, HRC and others have expressed the desire to move our Harlem personnel (10 total and all employed by CESC) to Water Street now. I have David Beale exploring the options of fitting them in with the 18th floor at Water street including related costs and possible displacement of CF related but separately incorporated entities in the following order: AHG, CHAI, CGSGI. I expect to get his proposal sometime next week. Some considerations before we decide:

a. Do we want to move these personnel from Harlem? Keep in mind that we risk exposure because it will mean GSA is paying for an empty 8600 square feet until August 2014, our first out option. We have landlords who aren't happy we moved most of our operations out of their building and wouldn't mind leaking an empty floor to the press.
b. If we are okay with taking the exposure risk, do we envision the auditors coming back and recommending (and BC accepting) that CESC should not operate within CF space even with a sub-lease agreement?
c. The advantages of course are obvious – better business continuity, management, etc.

Should I proceed with exploring moving our Harlem personnel to Water Street within next few months?

Statement of Eric Garcetti Endorsing Hillary Clinton for President

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

November 5, 2015

CONTACT: Bill Carrick—323-469-1592

"I'm proud to endorse Hillary Clinton for President because I know that she understands the challenges and opportunities facing our cities and will be a powerful leader in building our future.

She will fight to transform the lives of hard-working Americans because she shares the values we hold dear — she has a passion for civil rights, the know-how to connect our communities, the drive to tackle economic inequality, and a commitment to ensuring millions know the benefits of citizenship.

Like Mayors across the country, I am working hard to bring shared prosperity to every corner of our city. And in Hillary Clinton, Mayors will have a partner — someone who is ready to stand up for our mainstream economy, and the people who need help the most.

I look forward to working with my fellow Angelenos and others across the nation to assure that Hillary Clinton is the next President of the United States"

Dear Colleagues,

A month from today is the Friday of the last week of classes for this semester (how can that be?). It is also the date of the day-long conference here at the Law Center on Economic Inequality: Causes, Consequences, and Responses that I have put together along with Robin West and Alvaro Santos. We've been fortunate to be able to bring together an outstanding group of people to speak on multiple dimensions of this important and timely subject, and hope that you will be able to join us and participate in the discussion. I'm attaching the schedule for the day. You can RSVP at http://goo.gl/forms/ufxX1D977H.

Hope that you will mark your calendars and that we see you there.

Best,

Schakowsky Announces She Will Seek Reelection to House.

Declines Senate Bid

(Link to video from Congresswoman Schakowsky: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=siSlORK6D20)

Chicago, IL (June 8th, 2009) Congresswoman Jan Schakowsky (D-9th) announced today that she will seek re election to her 9th District Congressional seat.

She indicated that she had decided against mounting a campaign for the US Senate.

"I seriously explored mounting a campaign for the Senate", said Schakowsky.

"The polls and response from Democratic leaders and grassroots voters -- across Illinois and around the country -- convinced me I would have a very strong chance of winning a Senate race," she said.

"But I have worked my entire career for this historic moment and I decided that in order to run for Senate I would simply have to divert too much time and energy to do the massive amounts of fund raising required by a serious Senate bid," she continued

"I feel confident that I could raise the $10 million dollars needed for a primary race - and the $16 million plus needed for a general election campaign - but to do it I would have to become a telemarketer five to six hours each day."

"Over the next two years Congress has the opportunity to provide health care to all Americans, begin on the road to energy independence, remake the financial regulatory system, pass immigration reform and help transform our relationship with the rest of the world. I think the next two years present a once in a lifetime opportunity to make progressive change. I want to devote my energy to help make these things a reality, and decided that I simply couldn't do it if I mounted a campaign for Senate," she concluded.

"Schakowsky is a close ally of President Barack Obama, having served as a National Co-Chair of his Campaign. She is also close to House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, a member of the House Democratic Leadership, and the powerful Energy and Commerce Committee. She also serves as Chair of the Sub-Committee on Oversite of the Select Committee on Intelligence.

Lakeisha and her family with their VASH Housing Specialist, Alfonzo

John --

This morning, I celebrated Veterans Day by helping Lakeisha — a Navy veteran — and her family finish moving into their new home. We built a bunk bed for her beautiful daughters — who were so excited about having a place where they can wake up each morning, together, without worrying about where they will rest their heads at night.

Hundreds of veterans like Lakeisha have gotten help from the City, County, State and the feds, but still lack essential items — like beds for their children, or pots and pans for the kitchen.

Will you join me and donate now to ensure that 500 more vets can make a house into a home?

Today was my favorite Veterans Day yet, because I had the pleasure of personally making a difference in a veteran's life. While I know not everyone will have the chance to help a military family move, we can all take a moment to lend a hand to those who have sacrificed to give us our freedom.

Will you give $11 to the #HomesForHeroes campaign to make sure that these servicemen and servicewomen, who have given so much to each of us and the entire nation, will have a home for the holidays?

All donations go directly toward moving veterans into homes. We will share our success, and more moving stories of L.A.'s courageous vets, as we move closer and closer to our goal of housing every homeless veteran in our city.

NCLR APPLAUDS OBAMA ADMINISTRATION'S APPOINTMENTS

Washington, DC—Janet Murguía, President and CEO of the National Council of La Raza (NCLR), the largest national Hispanic civil rights and advocacy organization in the United States, commended the Obama transition team for appointing a record number of Latinos to key positions in the next Administration, including the historic appointment of three Latinos to the Cabinet.

"President-elect Obama's appointments thus far have earned widespread praise from across the political spectrum for their unusual level of achievement and experience," Murguía stated. "Both individually and as a group, his Hispanic appointees more than meet this test. This level of diversity and accomplishment will be of enormous benefit to the country as we address the challenges ahead."

Murguía continued, "Governor Bill Richardson has ably served his state and country as a congressman, governor, ambassador, and as a cabinet secretary, and he will bring his considerable skill and stature to his new position as Secretary of Commerce. Senator Ken Salazar is an outstanding choice for Secretary of the Interior—his ranching background and diverse Senate experience demonstrate his capacity to balance multiple interests while serving as the steward of our land and natural resources. Based on Representative Hilda Solis' distinguished track record and remarkable life story, it's clear that she will lead a revitalized Department of Labor to perform its core function of protecting and training American workers, such as by advancing into new areas like green jobs, and also produce a more culturally competent health care workforce."

"Not only has he appointed a record number of Latinos to his cabinet, President-elect Obama will also benefit from the advice of many top-notch Latinos on his White House staff. NCLR's own Cecilia Muñoz will combine substantive policy knowledge and deft political skill in her new job as Director of Intergovernmental Affairs. Former Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera will be the head of the White House Military Office, continuing his decades-long commitment of service to our country. Nancy Sutley, Chair-designate of the Council of Environmental Quality and the daughter of immigrants, has been a major player in shaping environmental policy at the local, state, and national levels. Bronx Borough President Adolfo Carrion provides a unique combination of technical expertise and street smarts to the newly-created post of Director of Urban Policy. Finally, my former White House colleague, Moe Vela, will deploy his management skills as the Vice President's Director of Administration."

"This stellar group of appointments illustrates the enormous talent that exists across all sectors of the Latino community. While many key positions remain unfilled, we have every reason to believe that President-elect Obama and his team will continue to tap this large and growing pool of Hispanic talent as they continue the crucial appointments process," Murguía concluded.

Subject:	TV ads - update

Team –

Sanders is going up tomorrow with significant (1,200-1,600 pts) Ohio and Illinois and a small buy in Missouri. Our plan all along had been to go as soon as he goes, so that's what we plan to do tomorrow – with fairly aggressive buys in the main media markets in those states (up to 2,400 points). We'll get updated competitives around asap, but along the lines of what a group of us discussed the other day, we're suggesting we initially launch with this battery (combining our basic core message spot with a top-testing narrower approach):

Illinois: dual track "Breaking Barriers" with "Johnson Control" (top testing message in Illinois poll; ad tested well in last week's groups)

Missouri and Ohio: dual track "Breaking Barriers" and "Valeant" (top testing message in those surveys – and top scoring ad in testing).

And then we use tomorrow's groups and the online ad-testing to help inform traffic changes for next week – and whether to stay in a corporate greed lane (wham bam), or move to education (as surveys suggested) or a jobs approach (perhaps if we're enthralled in a trade debate).

I think we're all basically on the same page here, but please flag any concerns.

Thanks,

Oren

At the convention in denver, john asked if I would be willing to help with the transition. He told me to expect to hear from cassandra butts, which didn't happen, so instead I went down to florida to work on the campaign. Anyway, I would still love to help if there is a need. You may recall that I did the transition in 92-93 and spent 3 years in presidential personnel. I also oversaw governor corzine's transition as his chief of staff-designate in 05-06. Thanks for any attention you can give to this. My cell if you need it is 732-371-1914. Tom

Based on conversations today, below is the finalized version of the response plan:

Q: The State Department says that at least 16 of the emails that Sid Blumenthal turned over to the Benghazi Select Committee were not included in the 55,000 pages of materials produced by Hillary Clinton. Doesn't this prove that Hillary Clinton deleted certain emails at some point before producing them to the Department?

ON-THE-RECORD RESPONSE FROM SPOKESMAN NICK MERRILL:

"Hillary Clinton has turned over 55,000 pages of materials to the State Department, including all emails in her possession from Mr. Blumenthal."

ADDITIONAL POINTS ON BACKGROUND FROM CLINTON AIDE:

Not only did Clinton turn over all emails that she has from Blumenthal, she actually turned over more than a dozen emails that were not included in what Mr. Blumenthal handed over to the House committee.

We do not have a record of other correspondence between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Blumenthal beyond that which was turned over to the State Department. In terms of the documents provided by Mr. Blumenthal to the House committee, we do not recognize many of those materials and cannot speak to their origin.

OFF RECORD, if pressed on whether we are essentially admitting the possibility that she deleted some emails:

Look, we do not know what these materials are, or where they came from. Just take a look at them: many of the documents are not even formatted as emails.

But even if Sid is right and some of these documents were at some point sent to Clinton, there is nothing in any of these emails that is remotely new or interesting. Indeed, none of these 16 emails are qualitatively different than the dozens of others that Hillary already produced to the State Department. So it is completely ridiculous to suggest that there might have been any nefarious basis for her to want to delete any of Sid's correspondence.

What that means specifically is that they are going to turn over all the Blumenthal emails to the Committee that they hav along with some other HRC emails that include a slightly broader set of search terms than the original batch. That of course includes the emails Sid turned over that HRC didn't, which will make clear to them that she didn't have them in the first place, deleted them, or didn't turn them over. It also includes emails that HRC had that Sid didn't, as Brian noted.

NOTE; TIME IS TIGHT: the bill to change the primary needs to be introduced Tuesday to get through both chambers before the assembly adjourns.

Goal: for Daley to call Speaker Madigan's COS Tim Mapes. Ideally, Daley would also have his friend Mike McClain call Mapes with the same message.

Overview:
The overall goal is to move the IL primary out of mid March, where they are currently a lifeline to a moderate Republican candidate after the mostly southern Super Tuesday. IL was a key early win for Romney in 12.
Our preference would be for them to move all the way to May, but if they at least move to April 12 or April 19 they will have the day to themselves and presumably garner a lot of coverage. They will also be influencing a big northeast primary day on April 26.
They will receive a bonus of 10% extra delegates if they move to April and 20% if they move to May. Mapes has said repeatedly they don't care about that.
As we discussed, they don't really care about being helpful and feel forgotten and neglected by POTUS. The key point is that this is not an Obama ask, but a Hillary ask. And the Clintons

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I said something inaccurate when speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. I made a mistake, plain and simple.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.

We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This issue is important to me. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with about 50,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, almost 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. That is absolutely inexcusable.

I believe there's even more we can – and must – do together. For starters, let's continue to increase HIV and AIDS research and invest in the promising innovations that research is producing. Medications like PrEP are proving effective in preventing HIV infection; we should expand access to that drug for everyone, including at-risk populations. We should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide healthcare to those with HIV and AIDS. We should call on states to reform outdated and stigmatizing HIV criminalization laws. We should increase funding for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses and drug costs, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge patients by jacking up the price of lifesaving medications.

We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them and to future generations to continue that fight together. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. As president, I promise you that I will not let up until we reach that goal. We will not leave anyone behind.

This is work that I've been committed to for a long time. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV AND AIDS around the globe. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance, and increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV (including key populations at risk of discrimination), and investing in innovative research and technology.

I believe there's even more we can do together. For starters, we should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide health care to those living with HIV AND AIDS. And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge prices of lifesaving medications. We owe it to them, and to future generations, to continue that fight together. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. BUT IN EXCUSABLY, HIV AND AIDS CONTINUES TO DISPROPORTIONATELY IMPACT COMMUNITIES OF COLOR, TRANSGENDER PEOPLE, YOUTH AND STILL GAY AND BISEXUAL MEN. WHEN THE TOOLS EXIST TO END THIS EPIDEMIC ONCE AND FOR ALL, THERE ARE STILL FAR TOO MANY PEOPLE DYING TODAY.

More people with HIV are leading full, happy lives. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. And AS PRESIDENT, I PROMISE YOU THAT I WILL NOT let up until we reach that goal.

I've heard from countless people who are hurt and disappointed by what I said yesterday at Nancy Reagan's funeral about the Reagans' record on HIV/AIDS, and I understand why. The comment was just wrong, and I said so right away.

The Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV/AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite is true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation, but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis, and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't hear and maybe don't even know – the unsung heroes who fought on the front lines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists, and ordinary people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV/AIDS. Their courage and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo saved lives.

We've come a long way since. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good, and erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This is work that I've been committed to for a long time.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV/AIDS around the globe. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance, and increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV (including key populations at risk of discrimination), and investing in innovative research and technology.

I believe there's even more we can do together. For starters, we should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide health care to those living with HIV/AIDS. And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge prices of lifesaving medications. And we should expand access to medications like PrEP.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them, and to future generations, to continue that fight together. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full, happy lives. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. And we can't let up until we reach that goal.

Have floated this idea in a couple of places, but putting it on this thread as well--we have two places online that we could respond to in terms of digital organizing perspective. There is an Out for Hillary group with 14k members that I think some kind of extended engagment over this would be helpful--an AMA with Dominic/ Robby/Dennis, a special Note (which is a long form format over Facebook), re-purposing the Medium piece there, etc would go a long way. Our other option is Reddit, which has an extremely vocal core of LGBT members, but I would prioritize this Facebook group, which is the largest LGBT community of Hillary's supporters I know. These are friendlies, they are already carrying water for us making sure the apology is out there, and they firmly sit in groups 1 and 2 that Dom identified.

Whatever we did to send our LGBT talking points to folks has really worked, they are popping up everywhere on the supporter Facebook groups.

so mixed up. And in the absence of any explanatory information, they assume the worst -- like that this was some cynical political strategy of ours. (Which, I would note, makes no sense -- why would our strategy be to piss everyone off? -- but regardless.)

So I would vote to do a little something just to give people an understanding of how this happened, and then pivot to something else -- maybe that's celebrating the people who really did start a national conversation on AIDS, or something else.

Believe LP is working on a draft that could be a Facebook note or a Medium post, just to give something to react to.

I wanted to start a new thread to give a brief update about what I'm hearing from folks and get up to speed on how we're thinking of responding in the short and long term. (Sending to a smaller group from yesterday's call but please do loop in others who should be a part of this convo.)

First, as you can imagine, most people are expressing palpable anger and hurt over the comments. I won't belabor the point because I'm sure we all fielded calls, texts, tweets in the last 24 hours over this. But suffice to say, we aren't in a good place with the community right now.

If I had to break things down, I'd put people into three categories: 1) supporters who were horrified at the comment but accept the apology; 2) supporters who are angry and can only be mollified with a longer statement, tv appearance, roundtable, or something else big that shows she "gets it." They will continue to make hay in the meantime; and 3) Bernie folks who are happy to have a new line of attack.

What concerns me is that in that second group are a lot folks from Queer Nation, ACT UP, and other activists who are out, loud, and not afraid of direct action or aggressive confrontation. Given that, I'd love if we could build on yesterday's response -- and quickly. I don't want this to fester.

I assume we're prepping an answer for tomorrow's town hall, but has there been talk in the office of doing more today?

Looking ahead, is it possible to bump up an HIV / AIDS policy rollout? Is there any interest in putting a roundtable conversation or OTR together? (Robbie Kaplan has already volunteered GMHC.)

Would love to know where your heads are at and to be a part of the conversation today about next steps and moving forward.

Thanks,

D.

Subject:	First Annual Georgetown Law Holiday Decoration Contest

Dear Georgetown Law Community,

We know that many of you are already contemplating the First Annual Georgetown Law Holiday Decoration Contest. The Fall contest was a success and with that experience in mind, here are the guidelines for this contest:

Decoration can begin at any time. To encourage the opportunity for the entire community to view the decorations, participants in the contest should have their decorations up by the 12th and complete by COB on the 15th.

The Law Center holiday party is on December 17th and judging is scheduled to occur that day from 10:30 to 12:00. We are planning to make the announcements and presentations at the holiday party.

Our Georgetown Law Communications colleagues may wish to incorporate the decorations into various messages for our internal and external communities. Obviously, if you decorations are done earlier, your work has a better chance of being memorialized.

Even with the high level of participation and decorating talent displayed during the fall contest, I am pleased that our colleagues participated at minimal cost by donating or bringing from home most of the materials used outside of the various office supplies. The decorations are for everyone and they are greatly enjoyed by the students and the enhanced community spirit benefits all. In my other role as Assistant Dean for Financial Aid, I thank you in advance for balancing both fun and finances.

If you wish to participate, please register in the Community Board thread .

Finally – HAVE FUN!

Thanks,

Charles

Andrew and Kristi,

I'm sure it's already accounted for, but we'd really like the moderator to push people defending McCain to explain their positions in these groups. If you could tip the moderator to explore any comments on his temper, that would be great. - Done

Specific edits

Facts

1: Should say he wants 100 years of war, and says he doesn't care about the cost. – We decided with Tara yesterday that we cannot make the "doesn't care about the cost" attack because that is not what he said.
2: Identify Reverend Jerry Falwell for context. Add language about shifts from other positions: "In 2000 John McCain called Reverend Jerry Falwell [identify him] an "agent of intolerance." This year he has embraced Falwell and shifted his positions on abortion, taxes, and immigration in an attempt to pander to the far-right." – Made the Falwell change. Do not want to add in abortion, taxes, immigration – these facts should be a single item and not conflate multiple hits. We have the Flip-Flop hit in the next section for that.
4: the attack is not a flip-flop on taxes it is that McCain wants to make the Bush economic program permanent, including cutting Medicare and Medicaid by $200 billion to pay for a permanent war in Iraq. – Changed this to a straight hit on this taxes, which is a good idea since we too the tax hit out of the next section. Did not add medicare/Medicaid as, again, that's conflating items and we have this in the 3rd Bush Term attack
4: Instead of "He" use "McCain" to be consistent with other facts.

Thematic Statements

- Test 14 now. Include all but Security, Taxes, Iraq – Straight Hit.
- 1: Add "McCain says 'he doesn't care what it costs him'" after "Yet McCain proposes keeping our troops there for another hundred years." – Again, agreed with Tara that we can't use this
- 2: Add as final sentence, "We don't need another President who uses war as the first resort instead of the last resort." – Stan wants us to keep the rhetoric to a minimum with these, so leaving this out
- 4: Please change to "says he will have to read" instead of just "will have to read Alan Greenspan's book." - Done
- 4: Add "John McCain can't solve our economy's problems, because he refuses to admit they exist." – Rhetoric. Would prefer to leave out

- 4: See bolded addition. “With a housing market in crisis, increasing prices, stagnant wages and the first drop in jobs in nearly 5 years the next President needs to understand the real challenges facing our economy. But, like George Bush, McCain doesn’t listen to public concerns and insists that "the fundamentals of our economy will remain strong" and that we're not headed for a recession.” – Rhetoric, plus this hit is already too long so would prefer to leav out
- 5: Please use “McCain is out of touch on economic issues” and/or “how can he understand the needs of average Americans” from the first draft. Using one or both seems to tie the statements together better. – Again, we have tried to eliminate rhetoric from this draft
- 5: Changing the insinuation that McCain is worth 30 mn to “he and his wife are worth up to 30 mn” would be more accurate. - Done
- 5: Use “opposition to a minimum wage increase from 5 to 7 dollars” to be specific. – Done, but did he make this quote about that specific min wage increase? Ben?
- 7: Begin with “Even though he campaigns against special interests influence in Washington” – Hit is already too long. Can’t add this.
- 7: “killed legislation” should be “helped kill legislation” - Not done per later email
- 7: Change statement to specify “$24 billion dollars in tax cuts for oil companies setting record profits.” – Can we back this up, that he has repeatedly voted for $24 billion in tax breaks? My understand is that was just one vote. The vote in question is about $13 billion in tax breaks. Doesn’t having two different numbers in there get confusing?
- 8: McCain has accepted $1.4 million from the health care industry – add this, please. Stan specifically asked that we take this out since people are hesitant to make the link and this hit is already too long. If you want to add it back we need to take out one of SCHIP, cutting medicare or McCain’s health care plan.
- 11: See bolded addition. “McCain would be nothing more than a 3rd Bush term. One Republican even said “McCain is Bush on Steroids” He has voted with Bush 90 percent of the time overall and 100 percent of the time on Iraq. Like Bush, he would keep our troops in Iraq for decades. McCain supported Bush's veto of the children's health care bill, Bush's plan to privatize social security Bush's tax cuts for millionaire and big corporations.” – Done, but this makes the hit too long. Going to replace “Mccain would be nothing more than a 3rd Bush term” with this. Don’t think we need both. Evne with this change I had to cut out
- 11: Change “100 percent of the time on Iraq” to “all key votes on Iraq” - Done

Rebecca

Having had our little dust up, this is an excellent memo. Only quibble is that I would place the role of enhancing the rule of law especially on national security matters as more of a priority for the office. Also in practice they are the last line of defense for deciding whether legislation to be signed is constitutionally flawed. I definitely think we are on the same wave length. Will try to set up conference call with Rahm and Mark for weekend.

Hi Kelly and John,
I have advised the NH HRC team of your terrific rallying of the NJ troops and plans to come up December 19. They are looking forward to your visit. As it happens, I have a family commitment that weekend, so my time will be limited in terms of my joining you all.
I also would advise your team that tickets to the debate are incredibly hard to get, so please don't get hopes up. That said, I think there will be some good campaigning to be done.
My understanding is that Nick Black of Clinton's NYC HQ is going to set up your schedule, so you should stay in touch with him.
Here is what Liz W. of the campaign advised me when I asked for input on how your group would be scheduled:
I love their enthusiasm, They should continue talking with Nick Black, who has been their contact at HQ. He will build out a great itinerary for them. They will most likely be knocking doors in Manchester and Concord. Let me know how it goes. Excited to meet them!

So let me know when you know more details and I hope this helps as we approach your December 19th date.
best regards, Sen. Sylvia Larsen, Concord NH

Subject:	Urgent update from Capitol Hill

Dear John,

At a recent Senate hearing I heard Louisiana Senator David Vitter say, "I am a cynic about the so-called science of global warming and man's impact on it."

Big Oil has spent millions of dollars trying to stop clean energy and climate legislation from reaching the Senate floor by urging their friends in the Senate to spread misinformation. And the more Senators I hear saying things like Vitter said, the more concerned I am about the progress they're making.

We're working around the clock to get the clean energy message out, but we urgently need more resources to combat the lies – and the deep pockets – of Big Oil and their cronies.

Big Oil is spreading lies to sabotage our transition to clean energy.

Help us get our new nationwide ad on the air.

Help LCV raise $60,000 by Nov. 20 so we can sustain our targeted grassroots campaign – and take the truth about clean energy nationwide with our TV ad.

Your support at this critical moment could make the difference in the fight to cut global warming pollution, create millions of clean energy jobs, and reduce our dependence on oil.

Already this year, you've helped LCV and the environment win an historic victory, when the House narrowly passed clean energy and global warming legislation. Now the battle is in the Senate – where corporate polluters, threatened by our House victory, have ramped up their opposition.

LCV needs your immediate help so we can get our new nationwide ad on the air, maintain our force of grassroots organizers on the ground in key states, and generate letters and calls to swing Senators.

Big Oil will be using the same hardball tactics that led to Senator Vitter flat-out denying the existence of global warming in a Senate hearing.

Make a donation today to give LCV the resources we need to make sure Senators know the truth about clean energy.

We'll never be able to outspend Big Oil. But with your help and the facts on our side, we can out-mobilize them, and win an historic victory for clean energy, and our planet.

Sincerely,

Sara Chieffo

John,

Have you been following the Senate race in Wisconsin? Democrat Tammy Baldwin, who would be the first openly gay U.S. senator, is running an incredible campaign. Now, just two weeks before Election Day, she's tied with her right-wing opponent Tommy Thompson.

And when I say tied, I mean tied. They were separated by THREE total respondents in one of the latest polls.

The Koch brothers and Karl Rove have spent a whopping $14 million against Tammy. With our help, she can answer their attacks, win this critical race and help ensure the Senate stays in Democratic hands.

Tammy must raise $50,000 by midnight tomorrow—just 36 hours away. Can you help give her the resources she needs to get as many TV ads on the air as she can in these final days?

Click here to rush your donation of $25 or more to Tammy's campaign by midnight tomorrow. She's got to raise $50,000 in the next 36 hours so she can implement her final TV ad push of the election.

Tammy Baldwin has been a progressive leader in the House and I know she'll make an incredible senator. She's been fighting for the same things we've been fighting for – from women's health to Social Security and Medicare.

We need to rally around Tammy during these final two weeks. She simply can't win without our help. So please rush your donation of $25 or more to her campaign before the deadline at midnight tomorrow.

Click here to make your donation to Tammy right now—before the deadline just 36 hours away. Winning this Wisconsin seat is critical to holding on to our majority in the Senate.

Tammy is someone who truly deserves our help and support.

Best,

Kirsten

I had to pass this on because it so effectively captures exactly where our members are this election cycle. On our goal of getting 100 candidates to sign on to the Fight Washington Corruption pledge by September 10th--it looks like we'll hit that goal by the end of this week.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2010/08/24/AR2010082405642.html

Citizens United aftershocks

By Katrina vanden Heuvel
Wednesday, August 25, 2010;

What are the consequences of the Supreme Court's Citizens United decision allowing corporations "unlimited spending in pursuit of political ends"? The world of campaign finance is new, confusing -- and very alarming.

Corporate groups are already using the ruling to raise lots of cash. Consider the recent work of a consortium of coal companies in West Virginia and Kentucky, including Massey Energy -- owner of the Upper Big Branch Mine where 29 miners were killed in April -- which is attempting to target "anti-coal" Democrats this fall.

In a letter to various coal concerns, Roger Nicholson, senior vice president and general counsel at International Coal Group, said , "With the recent Supreme Court ruling, we are in a position to be able to take corporate positions that were not previously available in allowing our voices to be heard. A number of coal industry representatives recently have been considering developing a 527 entity with the purpose of attempting to defeat anti-coal incumbents in select races, as well as elect pro-coal candidates running for certain open seats. We're requesting your consideration as to whether your company would be willing to meet to discuss a significant commitment to such an effort."

Among the interesting things about this is that 527 groups were relatively free to accept and spend cash even before Citizens United, but -- whether by confusion about the law, strategy among corporate fundraisers or both -- the decision might catalyze all manner of new corporate spending, anyway. Of course, 527's face looser rules, too. "As a result of Citizens United, 527's can now use corporate money to run TV ads within 60 days of the election, and can say anything they want about the candidate," says Joseph Sandler, former general counsel of the Democratic National Committee. "That's a big difference."

But corporations might want to think twice before jumping deeper into political races, attracting more attention in the process. According to a new Survey USA poll , 77 percent of all voters -- including 70 percent of Republicans and 73 percent of independents -- view corporate election spending as an attempt to bribe politicians rather than an expression of free speech that should not be limited.

Target is learning this the hard way. It donated $150,000 to Minnesota Forward, a group channeling funds to Minnesota Republican gubernatorial candidate Tom Emmer -- known for his opposition to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender rights. As a result, the company now faces a consumer boycott and angry institutional shareholders who have asked for a "comprehensive review" of Target's political donation process. Best Buy also donated $100,000 to the group and is facing similar calls for a boycott .

Still, what we are seeing are just the initial stages of what will result in, among other things, a flood of corporate campaign cash. Conservative groups, such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Karl Rove-backed American Crossroads, are gearing up to spend $300 million to hammer Democratic candidates in 2010, according to a Democratic Party memo obtained by The Washington Post. And chief executives are in "wait-and-see" mode when it comes to direct political spending, according to a former counsel to the Federal Election Commission.

There is no way private citizens can match the resources available to corporations to make their voices heard. That's why a public backlash against the Citizens United decision is so critical. Progressives -- galvanized by the brazen activism of the court -- have responded by organizing around a far-reaching pro-democracy platform and have already scored some important wins.

Under pressure from New York City public advocate Bill de Blasio , Goldman Sachs said it would refrain from spending corporate funds on "electioneering communications." Bank of America, Citigroup and Wells Fargo pledged to follow suit. De Blasio has also created an online Corporate Spending Tracker , which displays the electoral spending policies and contact information for the 100 largest companies in America.

MoveOn has also embarked on what it calls its "most ambitious campaign ever" -- focused on overturning the court's decision through a constitutional amendment and passing the Fair Elections Now Act , which would bar participating congressional candidates from accepting contributions larger than $100 and allow them to run honest campaigns with a blend of small donations and public funds. (The Nation, of which I am the editor and publisher, is a coalition partner in this campaign.) Right now, the campaign is pursuing a goal of getting 100 members of Congress and candidates to sign a pledge endorsing this agenda before the congressional recess ends on Sept. 10.

Passing the Disclose Act -- which was recently defeated by yet another Republican filibuster -- would be a modest step in the right direction; it requires corporations to show how they spend money in elections. But the deep reforms needed to truly put democracy back in the hands of the people will require a long and tough-minded struggle by all small-d democrats.

In the mean time, corporations are free to do a lot more than just donate to less-regulated 527's. They have a blank check. As President Obama noted in his most recent weekly address , the Citizens United decision "allows big corporations to . . . buy millions of dollars worth of TV ads -- and worst of all, they don't even have to reveal who is actually paying for them. You don't know if it's a foreign-controlled corporation. You don't know if it's BP. You don't know if it's a big insurance company or a Wall Street bank. A group can hide behind a phony name like 'Citizens for a Better Future,' even if a more accurate name would be 'Corporations for Weaker Oversight.' "

John -- we have some GREAT news:

On Sunday, Elizabeth Warren issued a rousing call-to-action urging Congress to make it easier to vote.

Election Day should be a holiday, so no one has to choose between a paycheck and a vote.

Last month, we asked our supporters a series of one-question polls on proposals that would increase voter turnout… and you OVERWHELMINGLY agree with Sen. Warren:

support automatic voter registration

91%

support making Election Day a national holiday

We know it, you know it, and Elizabeth Warren knows it: We need more people voting in elections in order to maintain a strong Democracy.

That's why we're working so hard to get more Democrats and Progressives voting...and more Democrats and Progressives elected in 2016.

This person should take over her twitter account for a day or a week, dial it back a bit but definitely tweet at people. Should be clear it's stated.

Then maybe do Late Night shows and Funny or Die to build off of it...?
And be the kind of funny, slightly bitchy person (but in a good way), these people imagine her to be (and she really is, after a drink or two).

Maybe she could do Funny or Die w/ Meyl Streep w/ the Galyfinakis (can't spell his name for he life of me) w it her. That would be Hilarious!

And I still think she should do Season Opening of SNL.

She hates this shit, but at the end of the day, nothing will move her personal numbers more.

I think she's not inspiring people because it's hard to latch onto her - the person at her core - with all the swirl around.

Feel free to reject out of hand. Just trying to send ideas in.

This past weekend, the Obama administration released a trove of new data on the performance of America's colleges and universities, including students' post-collegiate earnings. This data will put significant new competitive pressure on schools to up their game and rethink how they deliver education. Why the Euro Crisis Divides Germans and Americans

Hans Kundnani July 20, 2015

BERLIN—During the last five years, relations between eurozone countries have become increasingly acrimonious as they have argued about the causes of the crisis and how to resolve it. But the crisis is also causing tensions to increase between Europe, and in particular Germany, and the United States. Since the beginning of the crisis, many Americans — from former U.S. Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner to Nobel-Prize winning economists such as Paul Krugman and Joseph Stiglitz — have vociferously criticized the German-led response. Germans, meanwhile, have long been dismissive of these criticisms. But during the last few weeks, the animosity between Germany and the United States seems to have increased further . For those of us who care about the future of the transatlantic relationship, this should be worrying...

(1) Short presentation for HRC meeting tomorrow (to put on screen) – I'll have it on my computer too.
(2) Summary memo for IA and NH primary surveys
(3) Top-lines for IA and NH surveys (this is a lot to print, so figured you may just want to print summary memos)

Please let me know if I can provide anything else.

Hillary,

I saw a clip of you talking about race and humility on Friday, which struck me as exactly the right note to strike. Then it hit me. Why doesn't the campaign show clips of your 2008 Convention speech? It was one of the best speeches you ever gave, chiding your supporters for being in the race for you rather than for all the people you were fighting for. That litany, when you went through all those groups/people that you had met on the campaign trail and that you wanted to help, had every woman in the place, certainly including me, close to tears. If you bring it back now, it shows you at a humble, vulnerable moment doing what you do better than anyone in the world – picking yourself up and getting back into the fight that you have devoted your life to. I frankly don't know anyone else in American politics capable of writing or giving that speech, certainly including our dear veep. For those folks who don't trust you and your reasons for running for President, it's a powerful piece of counter-evidence.

Also, for what's worth on the speech front, I listed humility as one of my 7 fundamental American values in The Idea That Is America, going through Washington, Lincoln, Eisenhower etc. I sent a note to Dan S suggesting that he might find some good material.

Best,

AM

I thought that call was very useful.
The only area where I would raise major red flags is about sending out letters for a group with a membership fee - that sounds like a perfect formula for a press/political nightmare.

I don't know where you two all fall on the press profile of this group, I think the lower the better. I would also wait till we get our larger politics settled. We have identified the resources we need, I see only downsides not upsides to press.

The WSJ is already writing about factioning. Today's WSJ headline on congress: "Democrats' Factions Could Stall Grand Plans". The story even included an interactive chart on where people disagree: http://online.wsj.com/article/SB123120199307655729.html#project%3DNEWCONG09%26articleTabs%3Dinteractive If that got written, surely at some point, a more progressive outfit could right "Democratic allies organized to pass reform agenda" and highlight selected work of SEIU, moveon etc..

Dear John,

From the bottom of my heart, thank you.

Our victory last night is due to your ceaseless support. You made calls, you knocked on doors, you contributed what you could to help us get our message out and you spread the word by talking to your family and friends.

In short, this is your victory.

I'm so proud of all this campaign accomplished. We came from a double-digit deficit in the polls to pull off a fantastic win. We won because our campaign was focused on the right priorities. This is a victory for people over politics, Illinois over ideology and getting things done over gridlock.

As Gerry and I traveled this district over the past 18 months, we had the opportunity to meet many amazing people with stories that have touched me deeply. Lonnie from the Quad-Cities whose job at Norcross was shipped to China. Mabel in Peoria who lives in a senior center on a fixed income and was worried about the end to Medicare's guaranteed benefit. And Dot who joined us at our victory party last night. Dot has worked for more than 40 years at Sensata and now, when she is 62 years old, her job is being shipped to China. She was going to lose her job before Christmas, but management just informed her that she can stay through January to clean the plant on her hands and knees.

This victory is for Dot, Lonnie and Mabel. It's for working people across the 17th District who want common sense in Washington and a Congress that will get things done.

My family and I have been humbled and honored by the support we've received across the region.

Thank you. I look forward to serving as your next member of Congress.

Kindest Personal Regards,

Cheri Bustos

John --

I hope you saw Vice President Joe Biden's email this morning.

In order to protect our children and our communities by reducing gun violence, he and President Obama need your help. The most important steps we can take will require congressional action. And Congress will only act if we all raise our voices to demand it.

John, your voice in this couldn't be more important. Tell your members of Congress that you want to see decisive action on this issue.

Give them a call, let them know you support the President's plan, ask if your members of Congress are on board, then make sure you report back on the conversation.

It doesn't take long. According to our records, here's who you should call:

Representative Eleanor Holmes Norton
(202) 225-8050

If that doesn't look right, call the switchboard operator at 202-224-3121. If you're not sure who your members are, look up your representative here and your senators here .

Let us know how it went and who's on board right here:

Subject: President Obama is counting on you

Friend --

The President did something big last week.

He proposed a set of major reforms to help protect our children and our communities by curbing gun violence, and he's already announced 23 executive actions that will go a long way in helping keep our kids safe.

This is an important start -- but I have no illusions about what needs to be done and how difficult it will be.

Every step we intend to take will preserve the tradition of responsible gun ownership in our country and uphold the Second Amendment. And while we'll never end gun violence entirely, if we can save the life of even one child, then we have a responsibility to act.

This action includes not only what we can do, but what Congress can do. To make a real and lasting difference, they must act soon.

The President has called on Congress to act on four specific legislative measures: closing background check loopholes, banning military-style assault weapons and limiting high-capacity ammunition magazines, making our schools safer, and increasing access to mental health services.

Read more about the President's plan to reduce gun violence, and make sure you forward this to friends and family.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The President asked me to work with law enforcement, teachers, parents, sportsmen, Democrats, Republicans, faith leaders, mental health experts, and other organizations and individuals to come up with a set of concrete policy proposals. The plan he put forth is the product of those conversations and recommendations.

Right now, President Obama is counting on you.

Each one of us needs to speak up and demand action. It doesn't matter whether you live in a big city or a small town like Newtown, Connecticut. When our fellow Americans are victims of senseless violence, we all pull together as one American family.

Let's get this done, folks.

Whether the action we take saves one life or 1,000, it matters.

Thank you,

Joe

Subject:	Colorado - HRC visit and staffing

Hi all,

Thought I should send you a quick note letting you know what I am hearing from various folks in CO; including some input some of you have gotten directly from Ken Salazar, Wellington Webb and others. Also reflected herein are views from other statewide and local political leaders, elected and otherwise.

Secretary Clinton will be in Aspen and Denver on August 4 for fundraising events. We are working to make those events as strong as possible and having the main Denver event at Merle Chambers' home is very good. That said, especially since she also going to the Ergens', it is very important that while she is here, she do something to convey a big tent; that it's not just about the money. This goal could be accomplished with a formal event or even an OTR. Whatever kind of stop is best for the campaign, the event should likely be in north Denver, or other mixed race, not upscale, likely primarily Latino neighborhood. Could be a mini streetwalk – bounce into a couple of stores; or a roundtable in appropriate neighborhood restaurant; etc. Sec Salazar, others and I happy to arrange with whomever appropriate from HRC staff side. We need to send a signal that Sec Clinton cares about more in CO than the money and that there is recognition of the diversity of the population and Main Street concerns.

With regard to more broad staffing issues: We understand that the campaign had a staffer in CO on contract for a few weeks conducting grass roots meetings and that there is a replacement staffer now/soon to be on the ground. It is important this time around that staffer reach out to folks like Lyons, Wellington, Salazar, Crisanta Duran, Angela Williams, Diana G etc etc (I can give you a full list if you need it, though Jessica M should have it) so that they feel touched; and much more imp so that they can make sure that appropriate grassroots organizers are involved early. We had a meeting last week among lots of money and organizing types (including Farber, Swanee Hunt, Sasha Millstone, and many former Obama folks); primarily raising money with phone remarks from Dan Sorenson, Marlon Marshall. At that meeting, and in pre calls and follow up calls to me and others, a common theme emerged which is same I am hearing from others: Fear that the campaign in CO is starting to go down the same road as last time – not enough of a big tent, too many usual suspects and, related, not aggressive outreach to those diverse communities – race, gender, and geography – who should be engaged early. I obviously don't know when you plan to have a senior staffer and full team here and recognize the early state focus, but in the meantime, the staffer you do have on the ground needs to be more fully engaged with those community and political leaders who want to be helpful (esp given March 1 caucus date and Sen Sanders activities here). For example, there are community/political leaders who would be happy to create some sort of HRC campaign presence at community events and just need some materials and minimal staff engagement to do so. I should note that Sen Sanders is doing such things already.

Happy to fully engage myself and others to implement any of the above.

Best regards,

Steve

Subject:	a few thoughts for Friday's call

A couple agenda items that might be worth discussing:

- A report from Mark and Ted about what they're thinking about for VP team.
- I can give everyone an update on progress on some operations issues, specifically the website and personnel database (our WH meeting got pushed until tomorrow at noon). I also want to open up a separate discussion on whether we really need the second D.C. space (the operations working group is recommending no) and perhaps discuss how big our Chicago presence is going to be. This affects not only space, but how we apportion staff. We had a good conversation with Alexis today, and she said if Obama stays in Chicago and that's where we announce nominations, then that's where the press will be. And presumably we're going to need a fair amount of staff to manage the press and deal with Obama. That's significantly larger than the space we're envisioning for Chicago and might necessitate a change in our planning.

Dear John,

We hope this note finds you well. I'm sure things are very busy for you right now!

Former Congressman Mike Rogers and I invite you to join us for a salon dinner discussion on biodefense on February 22nd at 6:00 pm at the Cosmos Club in Washington D.C. As you know, biosecurity is an issue that I had the unfortunate experience of dealing with first hand when anthrax was sent to my Senate office. However, even with the anthrax attacks that took place in 2001, and the Ebola outbreak in 2014, biodefense isn't being as seriously considered as I believe it should be.

Mike, as I am sure you know, during his time in office was the Chairman of the House Intelligence Committee and a member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee. Mike built a legacy as a tireless and effective leader on biodefense, counterterrorism and national security policy. Mike currently hosts a nationally-syndicated radio show, is a CNN national security commentator, a Distinguished Fellow at the Hudson Institute and serves on the Board of Trustees at the Center for the Study of the Presidency and Congress.

Last year, I had the privilege of serving on the Blue Ribbon Study Panel on Biodefense led by Governor Ridge and Senator Lieberman. Mike briefed the panel and informed our final recommendations. Now that that the panel's report has been released, we believe we have an opportunity to elevate the political prioritization of biodefense and preparedness, as well as advance near and mid-term changes to address the challenges and gaps we continue to face.

Mike and I would like to bring together a small group of thought leaders, such as yourself, for an informal discussion. Ideally, we would like to build on the discussion that the Blue Ribbon Panel Study began, and identify some actionable priorities. In the end, we hope to use the ideas gathered during the dinner discussion to develop both short-term and mid-term strategies for increasing political interest in improving our national health security.

Given your experience and expertise in these areas, Mike and I are hopeful that you will be able to join us.

If you have any questions or would like to RSVP, please contact Caroline Selby atCaroline@Daschlegroup.com or at 202-508-3449 .

All the best,

Tom Daschle

Good luck today!

Personal prediction: Sanders will prevail but not by much…

I have attached the notes I promised. My money connections have kind of aged out, and while I will work on the music industry I'm pretty much down to ideas, so here are some. I tried to shoot as straight as possible and frame things in everyday language. Just take a look if you get a minute; maybe one or two thoughts will be helpful as you move ahead.

I brought this up with Jen a couple of days ago but just to flag and have this on our radar. Any mention that she is using her personal money to pay for costs could lead some to use that as an opening to either a) dig deeper into the paid speeches; or b) demand her tax returns to know who is funding the campaign.

I don't know how likely that is but the press is on a transparency kick. I do remember in 08 after it was announced she put $5 million into the campaign before Super Tuesday, the press wanted WJCs paid speeches and their tax returns. Our answer then was she was using money from her $8 million advance on living history.

In any case, could be nothing but wanted to raise just the same.

Three Anti-Abortion Republicans Tell House GOP To Drop Planned Parenthood Rider To Avoid Shutdown

If Congress fails to reach a budget deal, the government will shut down at midnight tonight — an event that would hinder economic recovery and withhold payment to soldiers. But congressional leaders are at loggerheads over one issue: family planning. Though it has zero impact on the federal budget, House Republicans are insisting that Democrats agree to eliminate funding for Planned Parenthood or make billions more in cuts.

While many Republicans are committed to holding up the budget over a social issue, at least three anti-choice Republicans are recognizing the absurdity of such an obstacle. Sens. Pat Toomey (R-PA), Tom Coburn (R-OK) and — surprisingly — Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-MN) have signaled a willingness drop the policy rider to reach an agreement and avoid a shutdown:

– Toomey on MSNBC: "I think what we should do is cut spending as much as we can, get the policy changes that we can, but move on, because there are other, bigger battles that we are fighting," he said yesterday.

– Coburn on MSNBC: "And my recommendation to my friends in the House is, you know, it's highly unlikely that many riders are going to get passed with a Democrat president and a Democrat Senate, so why don't you take the spending and let's get on to the budget," he said Wednesday.

– Bachmann on CNN: "I think what we should do is cut spending as much as we can, get the policy changes that we can, but move on, because there are other, bigger battles that we are fighting," she told CNN's John King yesterday. "I think that we should have a clean bill that makes sure that the paychecks get to the troops on time."

The "clean bill" Bachmann called for is exactly what the Democrats offered yesterday.

Perhaps this more sober approach comes from a recognition that, in attempting to strike at abortion providers, the GOP bill would actually gut critical women's health services instead. Planned Parenthood has long been banned from using federal funds to perform abortions. This measure would, instead, ban funding that goes to contraception, family planning, and cancer screening services.

But still, Republicans like Rep. Jeff Flake (R-AZ) are intent on passing the misguided rider regardless if it results in a shutdown — a position that, as the Washington Monthly Steve Benen notes, reveals the GOP as a party that "isn't just shutting down the government, it's shutting down the government for a ridiculous reason that the American mainstream will find absurd."

John,

We know we've been emailing you a lot, but here's why:

The GOP is spending millions this final week. And all of this late money from ultra-conservative donors like Sheldon Adelson is changing the environment. For one thing, they're trying to put California, Massachusetts, and New York in play to try to force us to pull resources from other races.

We can't let them get away with their plan. With your donations and support, we can do the work necessary to defend Democrats nationwide.

Can you help stop the GOP? All you have to do is make a contribution today so we can help defend Democrats from this late GOP money.

If you've saved your payment information with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately:

Donate $3 instantly.

Donate $10 instantly.

Donate $25 instantly.

Or donate another amount instantly.

John, not only do we have to stop the GOP from expanding their majority, but we have to think about 2016. The only way we can deal with this threat is with your support right now.

Standing together is the only way forward. Can you click here and contribute now?

Team -

Attached is the updated focus group guide for the week (Mon/Tues/Thurs) – which incorporates much of the feedback we got from folks.

A few things to note:

(1) We're obviously trying to do a lot in these groups, as you'll see from the guide. We fully anticipate needing to adjust after the first group and potentially mix-match different pieces with different groups over the course of the week.

(2) On that note, we've decided to add another night in NH for the week of the 22nd (exact date TBD). This will help us spread out the ad-testing a bit and give us more time with voters if we need to tighten parts of the guide for time.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(3) We'd like to do short debrief calls after each night of groups, while everything is fresh. Will send around a clean invite/call in for that during the day tomorrow.

(4) Mike/Matt/Halle – please let me and Binder know who from your senior state team plan to join us in person.

We then sketched out the attached outline. I'm going to fill in some of the language with the goal of getting her a more robust document later this afternoon (although still an outline). Could everyone take a look and weigh in now on the direction and argument? And I'll recirculate before sending to her in a couple hours?

--器官衰老---時間表

人類----器官衰老---時間表　　英國《每日郵報》報導

最近英國研究人員確認了人體各個部位在同時光較量中開始敗下陣來的年齡。

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

研究顯示大腦在20歲就開始衰老，眼睛和心臟的衰老年齡則為40歲，而女性的乳房，在35歲就縮水不再長大了！
以下就是人體一些器官的衰老退化時間表：

大腦：20歲開始衰老
隨著我們年齡越來越大，大腦中神經細胞(神經元)的數量逐步減少。
我們降臨人世時神經細胞的數量達到1000億個左右，但從20歲起開始逐年下降。
到了40歲，神經細胞的數量開始以每天 1 萬個的速度遞減，從而對記憶力、協調性及大腦功能造成影響。

英國倫敦帝國學院健康照護健保信托機構顧問、神經學家沃基特克·拉克威茨(Wojtek Rakowicz)表示，儘管神經細胞的作用至關重要，但事實上大腦細胞之間縫隙的功能退化對人體造成的衝擊最大。

我們無一例外會認為，白髮和皺紋是衰老的早期跡象，實際上，人體一些部位在我們外表變老之前功能就開始退化。

大腦細胞末端之間的這些微小縫隙被稱為突觸。
突觸的職責是在細胞數量隨我們年齡變得越來越少的情況下，保證信息在細胞之間正常流動。

腸：從55歲開始衰老
健康的腸可以在有害和有益細菌之間起到良好的平衡作用。
巴茲和倫敦醫學院(Barts And The Londonmedical school) 免疫學教授湯姆·麥克唐納(TomMacDonald)表示，腸內友好細菌的數量在我們步入55歲後開始大幅減少， 這一幕尤其是會在大腸內上演。
結果人體消化功能下降，腸道疾病風險增大。
隨著我們年齡增大，胃、肝、胰腺、小腸的消化液流動開始下降，發生便秘的幾率便會增大。

乳房：從35歲開始衰老
人到了35歲，乳房的組織和脂肪開始喪失，大小和豐滿度因此下降。
從40歲起，女人乳房開始下垂，乳暈(乳頭周圍區域)急劇收縮。
盡管隨著年齡增長，乳腺癌發生的幾率增大，但是同乳房的物理變化毫無關聯。
曼徹斯特聖瑪麗醫院乳腺癌專家加雷斯·埃文斯(Gareth Evans)表示，人體細胞隨年齡增大受損的可能性更大，如此一來，控制細胞生長的基因可能發生變異，進而引發癌症。

膀胱：從65歲開始衰老
65歲時，我們更有可能喪失對膀胱的控制。
此時，膀胱會忽然間收縮，即便尿液尚未充滿膀胱。
女人更易遭受膀胱問題，步入更年期，雌激素水平下降使得尿道組織變得更薄、更無力，膀胱的支撐功能因此下降。
人到中年，膀胱容量一般只是年輕人的一半左右-- 如果說30歲時膀胱能容納兩杯尿液，那麼70歲時只能容納一杯。
這會引起上廁所的次數更為頻繁，尤其是肌肉的伸縮性下降，使得膀胱中的尿液不能徹底排空，反過來導致尿道感染。

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

肺：從20歲開始衰老
肺活量從20歲起開始緩慢下降，到了40歲，一些人就出現氣喘吁吁的的狀況。
部分原因是控制呼吸的肌肉和胸腔變得僵硬起來，使得肺的運轉更困難，同時還意味著呼氣之後一些空氣會殘留在肺?堙X—導致氣喘吁吁。
30歲時，普通男性每次呼吸會吸入 2品脫 (約合946毫升)空氣，而到了70歲，這一數字降至 1品脫 (約合473毫升)。

聲音：從65歲開始衰老
隨著年齡的增長，我們的聲音會變得輕聲細氣，且越來越沙啞。
這是因為喉嚨?堛熙n組織弱化，影響聲音的音質、響亮程度和質量。
這時，女人的聲音變得越來越沙啞，音質越來越低，而男人的聲音越來越弱，音質越來越高。

眼睛：從40歲開始衰老
隨著視力下降，眼鏡成了眾多年過四旬中年人的標誌性特徵--遠視，影響我們近看物體的能力。
英國南安普頓大學眼科學教授安德魯·羅特(Andrew Lotery)表示，隨著年齡的增長，眼部肌肉變得越來越無力，眼睛的聚焦能力開始下降。

心臟：從40歲開始老化
隨著我們的身體日益變老，心臟向全身輸送血液的效率也開始降低，這是因為血管逐漸失去彈性，動脈也可能變硬或者變得阻塞，造成這些變化的原因是脂肪在冠狀動脈堆積形成--食用過多飽和脂肪。
之後輸送到心臟的血液減少，引起心絞痛。
45歲以上的男性和55歲以上的女性心臟病發作的概率較大。
英國一家制藥公司的一項新研究發現，英國人心臟平均年齡比他們的實際年齡大5歲，可能與他們的肥胖和缺乏鍛煉有關。

肝臟：70歲開始老化
肝臟似乎是體內唯一能挑戰老化進程的器官。
英國萊斯特皇家醫院的肝外科顧問大衛·勞埃德解釋說：
「肝細胞的再生能力非常強大。」他稱手術切除一塊肝後，3 個月之內它就會長成一個完整的肝。
如果捐贈人不飲酒不吸毒，或者沒有患過傳染病，那麼一個70歲老人的肝也可以移植給20歲的年輕人。

腎：50歲開始老化
腎過濾量從50歲開始減少，腎過濾可將血流中的廢物過濾掉，腎過濾量減少的後果是，人失去了夜間憋尿功能，需要多次跑衛生間。
75歲老人的腎過濾血量是30歲壯年的一半。

前列腺：50歲開始老化
倫敦前列腺中心主任羅傑· 吉比教授稱，前列腺常隨年齡而增大，引發的問題包括小便次數的增加。
這就是良性前列腺增生，困擾著50歲以上的半數男子，但是，40歲以下男子很少患前列腺增生。
前列腺吸收大量睪丸激素會加快前列腺細胞的生長，引起前列腺增生。
正常的前列腺大小有如一粒胡桃，但是，增生的前列腺有一個桔子那麼大。

骨骼：35歲開始老化
英國利物浦安特學醫院風濕病學教授羅伯特·穆茲解釋說：

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

「在我們的一生中，老化骨骼總是被破骨細胞破壞，由造骨細胞代替，這個過程叫骨轉換。」
兒童骨骼生長速度很快，只消 2年就可完全再生。
成年人的骨骼完全再生需要10年。
25歲前，骨密度一直在增加。
但是，35歲骨質開始流失，進入自然老化過程。
絕經後女性的骨質流失更快，可能會導致骨質疏鬆。
骨骼大小和密度的縮減可能會導致身高降低。
椎骨中間的骨骼會萎縮或者碎裂。
80歲的時候我們的身高會降低 2英寸 。

牙齒：40歲開始老化
我們變老的時候，我們唾液的分泌量會減少。
唾液可衝走細菌，唾液減少，我們的牙齒和牙齦更易腐爛。
牙周的牙齦組織流失後，牙齦會萎縮，這是40歲以上成年人常見的狀況。

肌肉：30歲開始老化
肌肉一直在生長，衰竭；再生長，再衰竭。
年輕人這一過程的平衡性保持很好。
但是，30歲以後，肌肉衰竭速度大於生長速度。
過了40歲，人們的肌肉開始以每年0.5% 到2%的速度減少。
經常鍛煉可能有助於預防肌肉老化。

聽力：在55歲左右開始老化
英國皇家聾人協會的資料顯示，60多歲半數以上的人會因為老化導致聽力受損。
這叫老年性耳聾，是因「毛髮細胞」的缺失導致，內耳的毛髮感官細胞可接受聲振動，並將聲振動傳給大腦。

皮膚：25歲左右開始老化
據英國布拉德福國民保健信托(Bradford NHSTrust)的皮膚科顧問醫生安德魯·萊特博士介紹，隨著生成膠原蛋白(充當構建皮膚的支柱)的速度減緩，加上能夠讓皮膚迅速彈回去的彈性蛋白彈性減小，甚至發生斷裂，皮膚在你25歲左右開始自然衰老。
死皮細胞不會很快脫落，生成的新皮細胞的量可能會略微減少。
從而帶來細紋和薄而透明的皮膚，即使最初的跡象可能到我們35歲左右才出現(除非因為抽煙或陽光損害加快皮膚老化)。

味覺和嗅覺：60歲開始退化
我們一生中最初舌頭上分布有大約10000個味蕾。
到老了之後這個數可能要減半。
過了60歲，我們的味覺和嗅覺逐漸衰退，部分是正常衰老過程的結果。
它可能會因為諸如鼻息肉或竇洞之類的問題而加快速度。
它也可能是長年吸煙累積起來的結果。

生育能力：35歲開始衰退
由於卵巢中卵的數量和質量開始下降，女性的生育能力到35歲以後開始衰退。
子宮內膜可能會變薄，使得受精卵難以著床，也造成了一種抵抗精子的環境。
男性的生育能力也在這個年齡開始下降。
40歲以後結婚的男人由于精子的質量下降其配偶流產的可能性更大。

頭髮：30歲開始脫落
男性通常到30多歲開始脫髮。
頭髮從頭皮表層下面的小囊，也就是毛囊開始鬆弛下來。
一根頭發通常從一個毛囊長出 3年左右，然後脫落，再長出一根新的頭髮來。

不過，由于男性型脫髮，從32歲左右睪丸激素水平的改變影響了這一周期，導致毛囊收縮。
每一根新頭發都比先前的那根細。
最後，剩下的全是小得多的毛囊和細細的短樁，沒有從表皮長出來。
多數人到35歲會長出一些白頭髮。年輕的時候，我們的頭髮被毛囊中叫做黑素細胞的細胞產生的色素染黑了。
隨著年齡的增長，黑素細胞活躍性逐漸降低，產生的色素也隨之減少，頭髮顏色褪去，長出來的就是白頭髮

Hi Everyone
New rsvps to the John's home on July 14th include IBEW, SMART and Plumbers. Thirteen unions are confirmed to be in attendance. I would expect upwards of seven other unions to rsvp to attend. I will be doing follow up.

Tomorrow I expect good policy conversations at the AFL-CIO and for excellent attendance. I'll have a report for everyone tomorrow night. Thank you to the policy team for making time.

Endorsement Process Progress: September Goal Date

1. AFT, IAM and AFSCME, in that order all by late September (as John stated earlier today)
2. IAFF will be endorsing in September (need Iowa endorsement date)
3. Building Trades-Monroe has been helping me to work a possible block endorsement by the majority of Building Trades unions. The Building Trades are made up of 14 unions. If we can get the majority of these unions to move by late September it does two things: 1. Avoids 14 different process requests by unions 2. Allows early state teams to work more directly with union activists in state. I think this would be particularly beneficial in Iowa.
4. NEA and SEIU, I feel will be October endorsements.

AFSCME, AFT, IAM, IAFF and Building Trades will be a critical big block to move in September. This will set up NEA and SEIU to go next. After these unions move, this is critical mass to locking in the AFL-CIO to follow and other unions. In order to do this we need to take a few additional steps (these are the same steps I've outlined in scheduling requests as well. I thought it might be helpful to see it in the process.)

Next Steps between today-September 30th. I am requesting confirmations.
1. Trades: HRC attends Building Trades Executive Board Meeting with HRC in July 2015.
2. Trades: HRC finishes call sheets to Building Trades Presidents (there are less then six left)
3. AFL-CIO: Confirm HRC attendance at AFL-CIO Executive, July 30th (Several trade unions will want to know that we are working the AFL-CIO endorsement process.)
4. AFSCME: Identify a date for AFSCME Member Round Table in Iowa (August or early September)
5. AFT: HRC Call In to accept endorsement (July)
6. IAFF: HRC to attend Iowa Executive Board Date and Press Conference to Accept Endorsement (September)
7. NEA: HRC to participate in Teletown Hall (July/August) and Back to School (August/September)
8. SEIU: HRC to participate in home care event New York

I spoke with Peter Colavito today and told him that California won't work with the Secretary's schedule but that we would still very much like to do the event in New York. Peter asked if there was any flexibility on location outside of New York. I told him that seemed unlikely. I also spoke with Foley and he's ok in a holding pattern right now. Let me know if anything has changed on this front but I have passed the news along.

Subject:	Re: From The Washington Post: The Fix: How Hillary Clinton can correct the biggest mistake she made in 2008

And I completely disagree with it! I think Cilliza is totally missing the mark (as usual if you ask me!)
In fact, I think running on her gender would be the SAME mistake as 2008, ie having a message at odds with what voters ultimately want. She ran on experience when voters wanted change...and sure there was plenty of data in marks polls with voters saying her experience appealed to them. But that was missing the larger point--voters wanted change.
Same deal here--lots of people are going to say it would be neat for a woman to be president but that doesn't mean that's actually WHY they will vote for her. That's likely to be how she will handle the economy and relate to the middle class.
It's also risky because injecting gender makes her candidacy about HER and not the voters and making their lives better.
That said I would not be surprised if this is a powerful message for donor and activist engagement (vs persuadable voters).

In the last 48 hours a) Hillary and her campaign have begun to question Bernie's integrity and b) older feminists are beginning a civil war against younger women with idiot comments such as younger women support Bernie to get laid. What would be the reaction if Bill Clinton, George Bush or Harry Reid comments such as this? Or that younger women must support Hillary for the sole reason that she is a woman?

Team Clinton has no idea the danger they are causing of creating such an intense antipathy towards Hillary that many Bernie supporters and younger women will not vote for her in November. I had coffee today with a female college senior who is an intern with the Obama administration---the daughter of a Democrat who has worked for senior Democrats who asked me to look after her while she is in Washington, who told me "I just hate her so much I might even vote for a Republican but I will never vote for her." And she doesn't even support Bernie.

Would you like a sample of what Bernie and liberals will say about Hillary if they angrily feel she is questioning Bernie's integrity?

The idea of the campaign for the candidate who could become the first woman president initiating a civil war between older women and younger women over her candidacy is political malpractice that leaves me speechless.

My phone is ringing off the hook with establishment Democrats who she thinks support her, who are appalled and alarmed by the kind of campaign she is running....more than one of them has said I could quote them by name, that's how appalled and alarmed they are, and I told them to calm down and tell the Clintons directly what they think, but not go public right now....

HRC is not free until 11pm at the earliest.

If we have everything done and circualted to her, she would like to do a call tonight.

That means the 930pm call John/PIR is doing to touch base with the consultants will be a call to say that we are still working through content with her and what time should we do a call with them all tomorrow once we have content she is comfortable with rather than anything more until we have something to share.

If you all can be free for a call with her between 11pm - 12am, I am inclined to make sure we send her updated material by 1030pm and tell her we will get on with her at 1130pm.

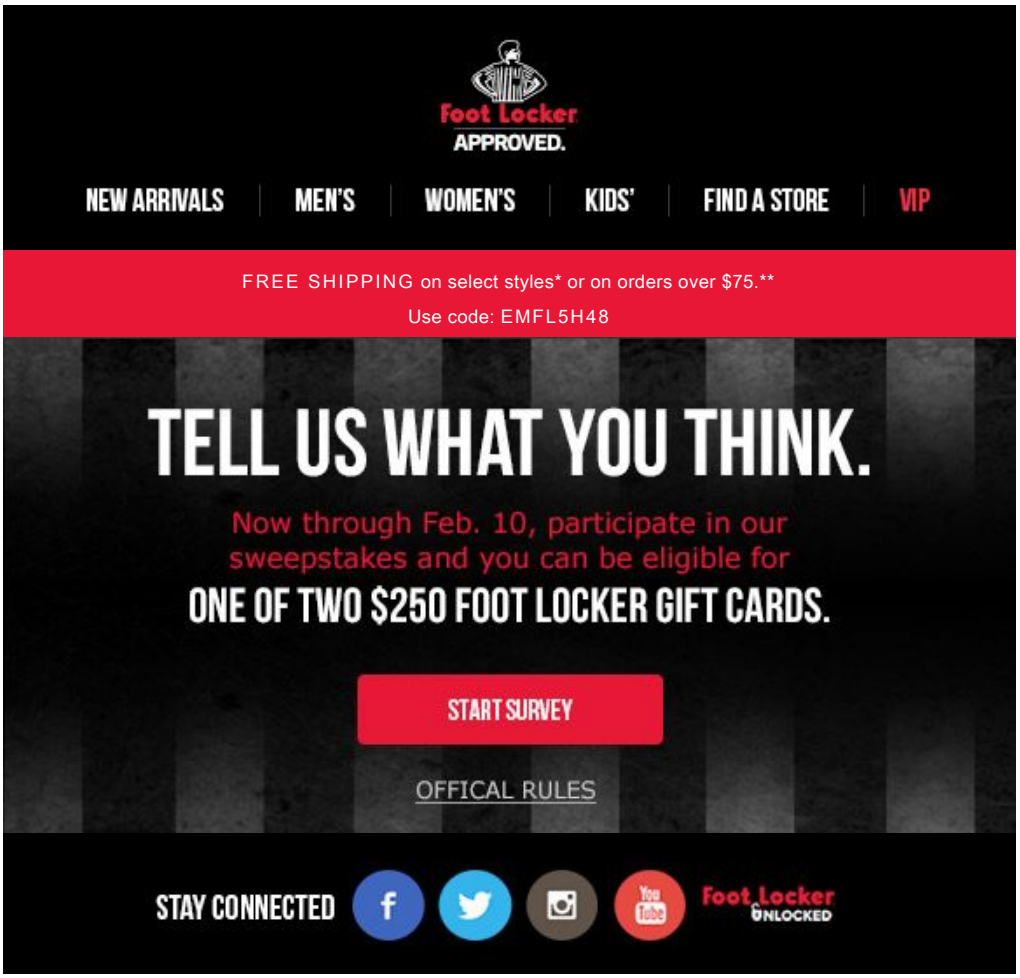

Will that work for you all?

John,

National Journal just named Sean one of the four most vulnerable Democrats, but as one of ONLY SEVEN openly LGBT members of the House, we cannot afford to lose his voice in Washington.

Today, National Coming Out Day, is all about visibility – about speaking out for equality. But the Tea Party is trying to silence Sean:

Congresswoman Nan Hayworth is reserving $1,000,000 worth of attack ads to drown him out and Speaker Boehner will do anything to have another rubber stamp for his harmful, anti-equality agenda.

We have to send Sean back to Washington, but if we don't hit our $7,000 goal, WE'LL LOSE!

Please click here TODAY and contribute to defend Sean, a champion for equality, and ensure he wins. We can't do it without you.

Thank you,

LGBT New Yorkers for Sean Patrick Maloney

SIGN IMMEDIATELY >>

GOP Leader Mitch McConnell is planning to completely GUT our campaign finance system. This week, he's trying to back Democrats into a corner to:

1. Eliminate caps on the amount of money that political parties can spend in coordination with candidates
2. Strip President Obama of the power to force government contractors to disclose political spending
3. Prohibit the S.E.C. from requiring public companies to disclose campaign finance activities
4. Prevent the I.R.S. from shutting down shady dark money groups

If McConnell gets his way, billionaires and corporations will have more power and influence in politics than EVER BEFORE.

That's why we need you with us John.

Agree w/mandy on her points below, though I think we can probably make the new 'four challenges' work. I also think having a segment that has a rundown (1,2,3,4) gives listeners a sense of specificity. That's good. But let's get her feedback.

I have some specific tweaks… e.g., the draft now says: "I'm here today because those who pushed the top down policies that crashed our economy want to do it again." It's not credible that they WANT to crash the economy, it IS credible that they are still pushing the exact policies that will do it again.

Dan, I can go over some of these things with you now or after we get HRC feedback.

BUT, overall, this feels much more in the zone. Nice work.

This is so much better. I think the mission and rationale come through quite clearly now.

I agree with Robby's comments. The "where we're going" needs to be more vivid for people and I'm not sure we will ever get there with the four fights/challenges frame.

Maybe we can discuss once we have HRC feedback.

The one other thing that feels a little light in the outline is bio/personal story.

First of all, thanks for all the work on this. We've come a long way!
My big picture feedback is that this encapsulates the vision we discussed in the meeting, but I think we're missing a fully developed narrative arc. There's a narrative of where we're coming from which nails the contrast, but it doesn't connect to a similarly strong narrative of where we're going TO. I think this is because we're relaying on the four fights to animate her vision rather than telling a story. I'd be curious what others think.
I think it's helpful and important to get her feedback regardless, so let's definitely send this over and get her feedback.

Team,

Attached is a new outline for the launch speech based on our discussion on Friday and then subsequent thinking from Joel and the speechwriters. We're going to share this with HRC first thing in the morning unless anyone has any huge concerns.

Two things to think about as we go forward:

-- The key graph here establishes "making the words middle class mean something again" as the WHY of her candidacy and "unlocking God-given potential" and "strong families" as the HOW. Does this work?

-- The Four Fights in this draft have become four challenges and are still very much a work in progress. We need to keep drilling down on how to do this.

Thanks to Joel for putting in lots of weekend time on this.

Best,

Subject: Drugs and Terror Monster Conjugated

SALVATION OF MANKIND BY NARCOTIC VEGETATION ERADICATION FROM THE AIR BY UNMANNED AIRCRAFT VEHICLES

Dear President Obama,

According to my analysis a breakthrough advent has appeared with Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows:
2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation causing its Desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:
1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV
Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.

17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?
18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health
19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV
Aloft in order to achieve Narcotic Vegetation Desertification with achievement for Posterity
20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!
21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up
Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!
22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 70,000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!
23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.
24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able indicating monumental achievements. He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence
25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming
Strike on Terror Organizations by UAV Utilization might have been an Unprecedented Achievement of Entire Mankind and President Obama personally.
26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite
My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!
27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.
28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

Be successful

One other flag: In this version I swapped out "the deck is stacked for those at the top" for "all the breaks still seem to go to those already at the top." I like this because in the economics values poll, "There are too many loopholes and breaks for big corporations, making it hard for small business to compete and succeed" scored much higher than "The deck is stacked against average Americans, with too many breaks for those at the top." Also, I just think it sounds less like politician speak. But others may feel differently. And I'm sure Joel will have a strong opinion as well.

He was a real waste-not want-not, pay-as-you-go, no complaining kind of guy. So I learned early on just how tough it is to make a business like this work.
> I'm sure you all have your own stories and experiences about this. When I was in Iowa last week, a young man told me about what it was like trying to buy the bowling alley where he had worked as a teenager.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

He had experience, talent, a college degree, and a plan to build a great business. But he also had a lot of student debt. Not because he was irresponsible and living beyond his means. Because he did was he was supposed to do. He got an education. He invested in his own future. But all the banks saw was debt. So it was a real struggle.

And that's the opposite of what we want to see in this country – which is more young people being able to start businesses, create jobs, and live their dreams.

Here in New Hampshire and across our country, Americans have come back from tough economic times. Our economy and our country are in much better shape because families did whatever it took to make it work.

Unemployment is down, and in most places homes are worth something real again. Americans are starting to think about the future again. Going back to school. Changing jobs. Starting a business. Doing the right things to get ahead.

But as that young man in Iowa experienced, all the breaks still seem to go to those already at the top. There's something wrong when it's so easy for big corporations to get a tax break but so hard for small businesses to get a loan.

America ranks 46th in the world in how hard it is to start a new business. We should be number one. It takes longer to start a business in the United State than in France.

Now, New Hampshire is one of the best places in the country to start a business. You've got fewer onerous regulations that defy commonsense, like excessive occupational licensing that keeps young people from entering new fields. And your terrific governor, Maggie Hassan, created a program to help people who lost their jobs in the recession get back on their feet and start new businesses. That's an idea we should be looking at expanding across the country.

So I want to hear directly from all of you about your own experiences and your own dreams -- about the obstacles and the successes that you've encountered and what we can do to help more small businesses thrive.

I'm running for President because you and Americans everywhere need a champion. And I want to be that champion. So you can do more than just get by -- you can get ahead and stay ahead. And starting a small business seems less like a gamble and more like an opportunity.

I'm taking on four big fights:

First, we need to build an economy for tomorrow, instead of yesterday, where being middle class means something again. And that starts right here with small businesses like Whitney Brothers, creating good jobs and helping people get ahead.

Second, we need to strengthen our families and communities, because when families are strong, America is strong.

Third, it's time to fix our broken political system. I want to get things done, so I'll work with anyone who has a good idea. But I'll also take on the powerful forces trying to take us backwards. We need to get rid of all the unaccountable money, even if it takes a constitutional amendment.

Fourth, I'll protect our country from the threats that we see, and the ones that are on the horizon.

All four of these fights will put us up against some pretty powerful opposition. But I've spent my whole life fighting for children, for families, standing up for America. And I think people know... I don't quit.

For me, this really is about doing everything I can to make sure that every child -- not just my grandchild, but every child -- has a chance to live up to his or her God-given potential. That's what I was raised to believe by my church and my family, and that's what I'll be fighting for in this campaign.

I'm going to work my heart out to earn every vote -- starting with yours.

Thank you for helping me start this campaign here in New Hampshire. Now, I'm eager to hear from you how these challenges are impacting your lives and your businesses, to share some of my ideas, to ask you some questions, and to answer some of yours.

Hi everyone – the following letter below from President Clinton was sent to Clinton Foundation supporters this morning. The letter thanks them for their support of the Clinton Foundation and explains what the Clinton Foundation does and why this work is so important.

As you hopefully saw, President Clinton delivered remarks at the United Nations yesterday where he discussed the role of governments, the private sector and NGO's, including the Clinton Foundation, in addressing critical global health challenges. You can read about those remarks here or watch them here .

On background, taken together you can see President Clinton is making an effort to speak directly to the audiences who understand and are important to supporting Clinton Foundation work - individual donors, governments, NGO's, business and philanthropists - and will continue to do so in the coming weeks.

Also, a number of Clinton Foundation supporters have recently spoken out about their support:

Dear Friend,

Chelsea and I recently returned from a trip to Africa where we saw the results of the work that you support through the Clinton Foundation. We make this trip almost every year to see the work our Foundation, the Clinton Health Access Initiative (CHAI), and CGI partners do, and the people we're able to help.

As you all know, it's the political season in America, so the purpose and impact of the efforts your support makes possible has largely been ignored in recent coverage of the Foundation. But we are and always have been a non-partisan, inclusive foundation with lots of support from and involvement by people across the political spectrum and governments from right to left, all committed to our creative solutions-centered work. That's why I am writing to you and our hundreds of thousands of other supporters in the U.S. and around the world to let you know how grateful I am for your support, and for our staff and our partners, and how determined I am that our work will continue.

Next week, Donna Shalala will join the Foundation as President and CEO. She will inherit a senior leadership who have years of experience in the NGO and private sectors, and a talented, dedicated, diverse staff, all deeply committed to keep doing the kind of inspiring work we saw in Africa. We will also continue to look for ways to improve our reporting systems so that we can operate as accurately, efficiently, and transparently as possible – a goal to which we have been committed since day one.

I started the Clinton Foundation when I left the White House to continue working on issues I had long cared about, where I believed I could still make an impact. I grew up believing that if I worked hard enough I could build a rewarding life, and entered public service to create more opportunities for others and to empower them to seize those opportunities – or as we say, to have better life stories. That same purpose has driven our work at the Clinton Foundation – whether we're helping smallholder farmers in Africa increase their yields or supporting women entrepreneurs in Latin America as they build better lives for their families.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From the very beginning, the Clinton Foundation has intentionally taken a different approach to addressing global challenges. Except to spur recovery in the aftermath of disasters like the South Asian tsunami, Hurricane Katrina, and, over a longer period, in Haiti, we don't primarily make grants to other organizations. Instead, we implement and organize projects ourselves by bringing partners together, including governments, businesses, labor unions, philanthropies, other NGOs, and the people we're trying to help, and join them on the ground to solve problems faster, better, and at lower cost. We strive for innovative approaches to problem solving that are sustainable and yield strong results. With each of our initiatives, we try both to change lives today and offer a model for meaningful and replicable future action. The best way to do that usually starts with forming inclusive networks of all stakeholders. We incorporate data and metrics into the Foundation's work and encourage others to help scale-up or replicate our successful projects wherever they can touch more lives.

My work with the Clinton Foundation over the past 14 years has been one of the most rewarding endeavors of my life, as every day I see how, with your support, our programs change lives. While in Africa, I met many of the people we're helping build better futures, provide for their families, and strengthen their communities. Their lives tell the real stories of the Clinton Foundation, and they are worth hearing.

In Tanzania, I visited Wazia Chawala. She is a farmer and a single mother raising seven children. She is also one of 85,000 people in Tanzania, Malawi, and Rwanda participating in our Clinton Development Initiative's Anchor Farm program. The program operates commercial farms and partners with local smallholder farmers to provide them with access to high-quality, low-cost seed and fertilizer, training in improved agricultural techniques, and transportation to market. Participants have more than doubled their yields on average, increased their incomes by even greater margins, and dramatically improved their quality of life. When I met Wazia, she told me how her increased productivity has helped her improve her home and keep her seven children in school. She is forging her own path out of poverty with a system that is life-changing, sustainable, and replicable. What is working for 85,000 farmers could work for millions.

In Tanzania, I also visited a dispensary run by CHAI that is helping to make life-saving vaccines more affordable and readily available to people in rural areas, where 70 percent of the country's people live. In addition to negotiating price reductions for the pneumonia and rotavirus vaccines, CHAI is using innovative solar-powered refrigerators to preserve the vaccines – which are only effective when stored in cool temperatures – in the remote areas of the country that lack electricity. I met with several mothers who have had their children vaccinated through the program, which is saving 11,000 lives annually, including one woman who walked twelve miles to get her baby vaccinated for the first time. Stories like that are why I started this work, and why I am more committed than ever to continuing it.

As I often say, there can be a big difference between the headlines and the trend lines. We mostly hear about the headlines – but the trend lines can tell us more about what is happening in most people's lives. When I look at what the Foundation has accomplished over the last 14 years, I believe we are helping to move the trend lines in the right direction. 9.9 million people in more than 70 countries now have access to low-cost, life-saving HIV/AIDS medicines through the Clinton Health Access Initiative; 16 million kids in more than 28,000 schools in the U.S. now have healthier food and more physical activity options; and members of the Clinton Global Initiative have made 3,200 commitments that have already improved 430 million lives in more than 180 countries.

That's the real story of the Clinton Foundation – people coming together across traditional divides to help others live up to their full potential. We are grateful that you have been a part of it.

We'll keep trying to reach our goals faster, better, and in the most cost-effective way. We'll continue to strive for accuracy and transparency and, most important, keep working on the mission and measuring our progress every step of the way. That commitment to impact, innovation, and efficiency is what you expect from us, and what we want to deliver for years to come.

Thank you for your support of the Clinton Foundation. Together, we can build a future we can all be proud to share.

I encourage you to visit clintonfoundation.org/our-work to learn more about the way the Clinton Foundation works and our life-changing programs around the world.

Sincerely,

Bill Clinton

RE: Hillary Clinton Connects with Old Friends and New On First NH Trip

Hillary Clinton spent her first trip to New Hampshire as a candidate connecting with and listening to everyday Granite Staters. The trip was a success. She outlined the first of the "four fights" that are at the center of her campaign - building an economy that works for tomorrow. From Keene to Claremont to Concord, Granite Staters sat down for conversations with Clinton about the issues impacting their communities and daily lives. Clinton relished the opportunity to connect in intimate settings with folks at a small manufacturing business, a community college, a coffee shop, and at a small house party - a longstanding New Hampshire primary tradition.

Hillary Connects with Old Friends and New:

New Hampshire has always been a special place for the Clintons, and Hillary has a lot of friends here. Reconnecting with them, as well as building new relationships, were top priorities and are a key part of activating and organizing people to take part in this campaign.

Before touring a family-owned small manufacturing business in Keene, Hillary dropped by Kristin's Bistro and Bakery. As a new grandmother, she couldn't resist the opportunity to hold a cooing baby as she greeted patrons before heading to the counter. The Associated Press wrote: "She arrived in the pouring rain Monday for a stop at a bakery in the liberal enclave of Keene, where she ordered black tea with milk and signed 'I love you' to a deaf server while settling down at a table with patrons."

On Tuesday, Hillary visited the home of one of New Hampshire's oldest Clinton friends, Mary Louise Hancock. Hancock is often referred to as the "grande dame " of the New Hampshire primary and "serves as a reservoir of wisdom " for Democratic activists.

Quality Conversations with Everyday Granite Staters:

The smaller-scale events and venues gave Hillary Clinton the opportunity to interact with New Hampshire residents one-on-one. The results were a series of productive conversations where everyday Granite Staters could share their thoughts and ideas with her. The Washington Post noted, "She seemed earnest, curious and engaged in the conversation at New Hampshire Technical Institute on Tuesday, for example, and her remarks did not feel stilted or forced."

Here are the reviews from just some of the folks who met with Hillary Clinton:

From the manufacturing business roundtable:

"[S]he just seemed like she was listening more to what was being said and really hearing what folks were saying." – Dave Stabler, President of Whitney Brothers

"I feel she listened to what we all had to say… Having her here today, talking to her face-to-face, is something that you don't normally get to do on a regular basis." – Jim Kirschner , Whitney Brothers factory engineer

"She was at our level. Not over us, not trying to put us down." – Ken Proper , Whitney Brothers finishing line operator

From the discussion at NHTI, Concord's Community College:

"She genuinely cared and was interested." – Dave Luneau , NHTI advisory board & New Hampshire State Representative (I - Hopkinton)

"I feel like I've known her forever." – Dr. Susan Dunton , NHTI president

Outlining Hillary's Four Fights:

From day one, Hillary Clinton has made clear that this campaign isn't about her, it is about everyday Americans. Two roundtables - one at Whitney Brothers, a small family-owned family-friendly manufacturing business in Keene, and the other at NHTI, Concord's community college - created opportunities for Granite Staters to engage Hillary in a personal way.

In Iowa, Hillary Clinton laid out the "Four Fights" central to her campaign that she believes need to be waged on behalf of American families. In New Hampshire, she focused on the first of those four– "We're going to fight to build the economy of tomorrow, not yesterday, and make the middle class mean something again in this country," she told the roundtable at Whitney Brothers.

During the discussions, as the folks at the table shared their stories, Hillary discussed her own life growing up in a middle-class home in Park Ridge, a suburb of Chicago, Illinois. Her dad, Hugh, was a World War II Navy veteran and owned a small drapery business that designed, printed, and sold his draperies. Her whole family – Hillary, her mom, and her two brothers – helped out in the business whenever they could.

In addition to Hillary voicing her ideas, she was most interested in hearing from small business owners in New Hampshire on what steps they think should be taken to encourage small business growth.

This weekend, yet another story about Hillary Clinton's outsize wealth ricocheted through the blogosphere, this one publicizing her contract for a $225,000 speech at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, Foundation. Among her requests: travel on a $39 million Gulfstream jet, round-trip business class tickets for her advance team, a $500 cash stipend, lodging in a presidential suite plus five more rooms, and coverage for all meals and incidentals.

The story, based on a public-records request, has the same sneering, how-dare-she quality that much of the coverage of Clinton's money has taken on:

"Hillary Rodham Clinton likes to travel in style. She insists on staying in the 'presidential suite' of luxury hotels that she chooses anywhere in the world, including Las Vegas…. Clinton's $225,000 is something of a cut-rate. Documents obtained by the newspaper show that she initially asked for $300,000 and reveal that she insists on controlling every detail of the private event, large and small, to ensure that she will be the center of attention."

Wait, Hillary Clinton – the woman likely to be the next leader of the free world, a person as in-demand as Lady Gaga, Oprah and the Pope – doesn't charge a modest speaking fee, make her own way and fade into the background? Cue the outrage!

But what the pundit class sees as the real issue for Clinton is not the money so much as it is her awkward embrace of it – her Romney-like inability to take it as a given that she is very rich, and to stress that she empathizes with middle-class Americans rather than living their same struggles. She infamously described her family as "dead broke" when leaving the White House. "We struggled to piece together the resources for mortgages for houses, for Chelsea's education," she added. "You know, it was not easy." Then she ham-handedly tried to explain that they are ordinary-rich, not rich-rich. "We pay ordinary income tax, unlike a lot of people who are truly well off, not to name names," she said. "And we've done it through dint of hard work." It's been enough to cement a narrative about Clinton being out of touch.

What has been strange about Clinton's responses to the questions about the many tens of millions she and her husband have pulled in of late is that there is an elegant and obvious rich-Democrat way to answer them. She simply has to say, "Yes, we're really lucky. And I know first-hand that we don't need a tax break for our millions in earnings or our private jet." It's a well-worn response, too, given by Barack Obama and Bill Clinton among many others.

But it is a response that Mitt Romney, whose economic policies would probably have slashed his own taxes while raising them for lower-income Americans, could never give. It is a response that many other Republicans could not give either. And that is what will ultimately neutralize the issue of Clinton's wealth if and when she runs.

Clinton will offer a set of progressive economic policies that will likely raise taxes on upper-income families to pay for social services for lower-income families. (My guess is that she will propose a universal early-childhood education program.) She will run against someone who will likely cut taxes and social services, perhaps deeply. It's easy enough to paint Clinton as out of touch while she is running against a ghost. But at some point, she will be running against a living, breathing Republican, like Romney, one proposing policies like Romney's. And that policy context will make it a lot harder to paint Clinton as a out-of-touch one-percent-type – even if she does make $225,000 a speech and jet around on a Gulfstream.

CNN: “German intelligence recorded Clinton, Kerry calls, German media reports”

By Ralph Ellis and Frederik Pleitgen

August 17, 2014, 3:25 p.m. EDT

Germany's intelligence service has intercepted phone calls by two U.S. secretaries of state, German media reports reveal.

The news comes several months after Germany complained about the United States eavesdropping on its politicians.

German intelligence service BND intercepted a phone call from then-U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton "by chance" while Clinton was traveling on a U.S. government plane, the German newspaper Sueddeutsche Zeitung reported. The magazine Der Spiegel said this happened in 2012.

And Der Spiegel reported BND intercepted a satellite call from U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry in 2013.

According to the Sueddeutsche article, unnamed members of the German government claim that the wiretapping was accidental and not part of a widespread operation to eavesdrop on U.S. politicians. Der Spiegel said the recorded calls were deleted.

Sueddeutsche says it and German public broadcasters NDR and WDR based their reports on documents from the case of a German intelligence agent who'd given information to the CIA.

Sueddeutsche gives the man's name simply as Markus R. and said he was arrested in July after giving the CIA at least 218 classified documents.

Der Spiegel, quoting unnamed sources, also reported the Germans have spied on Turkey, a NATO member state. The magazine said it viewed documents supporting the claim from 2009.

Relations between Germany and the United States have suffered lately because of revelations about intelligence gathering.

Last month, Germany kicked out the CIA station chief in Berlin after learning that two Germans -- one working at a German intelligence agency, the other in the Ministry of Defense -- were suspected of spying for the United States.

Last year, Edward Snowden leaked information that the National Security Agency tapped Chancellor Angela Merkel's cell phone. A German prosecutor has opened an investigation into the matter.

The U.S. State Department and representatives for Clinton declined to comment Sunday.

MSNBC: “Violence engulfs Ferguson with gunfire and tear gas”

By Amanda Sakuma and Zachary Roth

August 18, 2014, 1:04 a.m. EDT

Multiple shootings, fire bombs and tear gas marked the worst night of violence in this St. Louis suburb that has been engulfed in tensions since a white police officer killed an unarmed black teenager on Aug. 9.

Missouri Governor Jay Nixon announced early Monday that he was “directing the highly capable men and women of the Missouri National Guard to assist,” in restoring peace and order to the community.

Residents, many with children in tow, had turned out for what began as a peaceful protest Sunday evening seeking justice for Michael Brown, the 18-year-old who was shot six times by a police officer who allegedly stopped Brown for blocking a residential street.

The protesters marched toward a police command center set up in a shopping mall parking lot when heavily armed law enforcement fired on the crowd using tear gas and rubber bullets. An msnbc reporter witnessed children suffering the effects of the gas, including two young African-American girls – one dressed in a pink tank top coughing as she struggled to push the shirt up over her mouth and nose while a woman rushed her from the scene.

Hours later, after a midnight curfew was in place and the streets were largely quiet, Captain Ron Johnson told reporters that the aggressive response came after multiple shootings _ some aimed at police _ Molotov cocktails and looting had occurred in what he claimed was an orchestrated effort ”designed to damage property, hurt people and provoke a response.” Johnson, the Missouri Highway Patrol Captain, assigned by Nixon to help restore calm in Ferguson, said at least two people were injuries in the shootings but that no police officers were hurt.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

After what started as a calm day in Ferguson, “peace and justice took a dark turn,” Johnson said early Monday morning. Feeling under assault, Johnson said he had no alternative but to elevate the police presence and disperse protesters. He said he was “determined to restore peace and safety to the people of Ferguson.”

Nixon charged that the violence had been carried out by “an organized and growing number of individuals, many from outside the community and state, whose actions are putting the residents and business of Ferguson at risk.” He called the violence “a disservice to the family of Michael Brown and to the people of his community who yearn for justice to be served.”

There were multiple incidents of vandalism and looting over a three hour period that began around 8pm local time. Johnson said multiple business including a Family Dollar Store, a pizza shop and a storage office were looted. A McDonald’s restaurant was overrun by protesters, he said, and employees had barricaded themselves in a store room when police arrived. Another convenience store was ablaze. Several reporters attempting to cover the events said they were briefly arrested while others said they were threatened with arrest.

The numbers of participants in the violence appeared to be small. Police said there had been about eight arrests during the evening but Johnson did not say whether any shooting suspects were in custody. Earlier Sunday, several reporters saw what appeared to be a dead body in the middle of Chambers street. But police did not report any fatalities.

Earlier, another msnbc reporter in the same area witnessed protesters, including teenagers and young children fleeing as the sounds of live gunfire rang out along the corridor where Chambers meets West Florissant – a hotbed of protest in recent days. A second msnbc reporter passed by a group of four armed teenaged boys who were firing live rounds from pistols into the air as they headed toward that intersection.

Several journalists announced on twitter that they had been arrested including Robert Klemko of Sports Illustrated who said he was being held by police along with two other reporters. Rob Crilly of the British newspaper Telegraph also said he was in custody. Hours later, as midnight arrived and a curfew set in, the streets appeared calm.

Sunday had begun peacefully with prayer services and a rally in support of the family of Michael Brown, the unarmed teen who was shot six times, a newly released autopsy report showed Sunday by a white member of the Ferguson police force.

But the predominately African-American town, grieving and enraged by police tactics since the killings, had grown more tense in recent days. Gov. Jay Nixon imposed a state of emergency Saturday and order a midnight curfew. But that has not deterred some protesters.

Sunday’s violence erupted along the town’s main thoroughfares three hours before the curfew was to take effect. An enormous police presence, including state and local law enforcement manned and set up perimeters around the area. A police helicopter circled overhead while armored vehicles patrolled the streets. One police van drove down West Florissant with the backdoor open while armed police inside pointed their weapons to the streets.

Four young men who appeared to be in their late teens or early 20s struggled to successfully light a Molotov cocktail. T-shirts wrapped around their faces masked their identities. As they threw one fire bomb toward police, it extinguished before making contact with the ground. Others threw glass bottles.

Although authorities confirmed gunshots were fired, they have not said by whom and from where. Meanwhile, protestors who came out for peaceful show of support for the Brown family were furious.

“All we was doing was marching,” said Lisha Williams, a local protestor who was tear gassed, told msnbc.

This turn of events comes as members of the community, neighbors and supporters stood in solidarity with Brown’s family, bringing together local leaders and civil rights icons to offer a respite from clashing tensions between protesters and police.

Captain Johnson, an African-American resident of Ferguson who has become a local hero for supporters wanting to rally peacefully in the streets, honored the slain teen and thanked him for the movement he inspired.

“This is my neighborhood. You are my family. You are my friends. And I am you,” Johnson said, bringing the more than 1,300 people convened at Greater Grace Church to their feet in applause.

“When this is over – I’m gonna go to my son’s room, my black son, who wears his pants sagging, who wears his hat cocked to the side, who’s got tattoos on his arms … But that’s my baby,” Johnson said to more cheers.

The mood inside the rally, organized by the Rev. Al Sharpton’s advocacy group National Action Network, was unified but somber as leaders called for swift due process with investigations into Brown’s case.

Earlier that morning, Attorney General Eric Holder ordered for a federal medical examiner to perform a second autopsy. The move to bring an outside opinion to aid investigations builds on festering skepticism among community members that local authorities will be able to properly handle the case.

Benjamin Crump, the attorney representing the Brown family, condemned the local police department for initiating a “smear” campaign against the late teen’s character.

“Your community deserves transparency,” Crump said to the crowd. “You all deserve to know that the police department will work in the best interests of you children.”

“There is nothing that can justify the execution style murder of Lesley’s child in broad daylight by this police officer,” he added, motioning toward the slain teen’s mother, Lesley Brown, who appeared onstage with her husband, Michael Brown Sr., but did not speak.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ty Pruitt, a cousin of Michael Brown, greeted the crowd with the now familiar “Hand’s up, don’t shoot” refrain, popular with Ferguson protesters. “[Michael] was a son. He was an uncle, a nephew. He was not a suspect. He was not an object. He was not an animal … but that’s how he was killed.”

Sharpton, who also hosts MSNBC’s “Politics Nation,” gave a fiery oration in which he called the fallout from Michael Brown’s death a “defining moment in this country.”

“These parents are not going to cry alone. They are not going to stand alone. And they’re not going to fight alone. We’ve had enough!” he said.

“You can’t get to the White House without stopping by our house and talk about policing.”

Sharpton also put the events in Ferguson in a political context.

“Where are the leading candidates for president?” Sharpton asked rhetorically. “Jeb Bush, Hillary Clinton, don’t get laryngitis on this issue. You can’t get to the White House without stopping by our house and talk about policing.”

He said he had never seen anything “more despicable” in all his years as an activist, as the Ferguson PD’s decision to “spit on the name and character of a young man who hasn’t even been buried,” by releasing the controversial surveillance footage which purports to show Brown shoplifting in a local convenience store moments before his death.

Sharpton also condemned those who have resorted to violence and crime in the wake of protests. “Don’t loot in Michael Brown’s name,” he said. “We’re not looters we’re liberators.” He concluded his initial remarks by calling on the community to get more active politically.

“Michael Brown is gonna change this town,” he said, before criticizing the paltry voting record on the area. “12% turnout is an insult to your children.”

A standing ovation erupted during a powerful cameo appearance from Howard University graduate Mya Aaten-White, a young woman who was wounded in the head while protesting for Brown in Ferguson. She is said to be making a full recovery. She didn’t speak to the audience but shared a long embrace with Michael Brown’s parents.

Hundreds more gathered outside of the church in support of the family in hopes that the movement galvanized by the peaceful demonstrations would lead to real change.

“This is not just a black/white issue — this is a human issue,” said Ferguson resident Lisa Williams. “If we all come together on this, then we can make a difference not only for African-American lives, but all children.”

New York Times: Amy Chozick: “When Being ‘Obsessed’ With Hillary Clinton Is Your Job”

By Amy Chozick

August 17, 2014, 8:00 p.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] Amy Chozick is a national political reporter with a focus on covering Hillary Rodham Clinton. Since taking the beat a year ago, she has written on Mrs. Clinton’s regrets about Benghazi, on the “super PACs” that are raising money for her potential 2016 presidential campaign and about two musicals inspired by her life. Some have said she is obsessed with the Clinton story. We asked her about her experience.

Maybe I am just a jobbing beat reporter and am missing something here, but I have been baffled at all the interest in (and controversy about) me covering Hillary Rodham Clinton.

I wish I could pull back the curtain and reveal the kind of delectable anecdotes that I relish in political stories, but the truth is I approach this beat exactly as I would any other beat.

People on Twitter sometimes say I’m “obsessed” with the Clintons. Am I obsessed? Well, yeah. Did my husband stage a vacation intervention on the beach recently when he caught me reading “The Death of American Virtue” about the Ken Starr investigation? Maybe. (It is strictly a bizarre coincidence that we live on Clinton Street.)

I’ve always thought that it is our job as beat reporters to be obsessed, and hopefully we can pass at least a little of that enthusiasm on to readers. Before I moved back to cover politics a little over a year ago, I was obsessed with Rupert Murdoch on the media beat. Before that, I was obsessed with television on the Hollywood beat (O.K., I still really like that one), and before that, as a foreign correspondent covering consumer culture in Tokyo, I was obsessed with Japanese teenagers who dressed like life-size dolls and hung out in Harajuku. (I owned a hot-pink cellphone and bought office supplies at a store called Kiddy Land.)

All that said, it’s an incredible blessing as a journalist to be on a beat that involves covering one of the most relevant and enduring figures in American politics. Readers are so interested in Clinton, and have such strong feelings about her one way or another, that they are, by extension, also curious about the reporters assigned to cover her (even though we are immensely boring by comparison).

I love that I can go to a family gathering in Texas or a cocktail party in Manhattan, and everyone wants to talk about Clinton or share stories about shaking Bill’s hand in 1992 or how they related to Chelsea as she grew up in the public eye.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Politics can often seem limited to the echo chamber of Twitter and cable news punditry, but it's important to remember that it really is one of the few topics that everyone seems to have an opinion about. And the opinions of the people outside that echo chamber matter a lot more, since they're the ones whose votes determine the outcome of the elections we opine about. I always try to keep that in mind.

I get frustrated when people ask me what it's like to cover one person. I don't see it that way. I cover 2016 Democratic presidential politics, which is like covering a multibillion-dollar business, with hundreds of personalities vying for power and influence. In this beat, I've written about everything from State Department policy and the conflict in Ukraine, to a profile of the Clintons' nutritionist and a mocked (but well read!) story about their summer plans in the Hamptons. I meet new people and learn new things every day.

No matter what the story, the beat comes with tremendous pressure to be as balanced as possible in my coverage. Supporters and detractors constantly look for signs of bias one way or the other, and attack me to protect their positions. I still take attacks and criticism personally, but I've also learned that it's impossible to please everyone. A thick skin — and the "block" button on Twitter — is essential.

Real Clear Politics: "Why Won't the Left Get Behind Bernie Sanders '16?"

By Bill Scher

August 18, 2014

There is a wariness of Hillary Clinton in some corners of the left.

"Will Hillary be with Wall Street like she's been all along?" asks the executive director of Democracy for America. "Generalissima Hillary Clinton," scoffs Ralph Nader—and that was before her hawkish interview with The Atlantic. Clinton's skeptics want her to face a primary challenger, if not to defeat her then to apply enough left-flank pressure so she will not have an incentive to drift rightward in the general election (or as president). Strangely, they are ignoring someone who is already auditioning for the role of progressive populist challenger, and who has the chops to back it up: Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont.

Left-wing Democrats pine for Sen. Elizabeth Warren. But she has emphatically said she is not running, nor is she doing anything prospective candidates have to do to prepare to run, like visit early primary states.

Sanders is practically identical to Warren when it comes to the issues progressive populists care about—and where they consider Clinton squishy. He wants to break up the big banks so they can't be "too big to fail." He wants to see bankers responsible for the 2008 crash thrown in jail. He was one of only four senators, including Warren, to oppose President Obama's nominee for U.S. trade representative in protest of the White House's push for regional trade agreements with Europe and Asia. He would increase, not cut, Social Security benefits.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For liberals who consider Clinton suspect on military matters, Sanders voted against the most recent defense spending bill, saying it was another “bloated military budget.” Warren, who represents a state with six military bases, voted for it.

Sanders holds an even bigger advantage over Warren: He’s actually interested in running.

Unlike Warren, he has used the phrase “I’m running,” as when he told the Huffington Post, “I’m running to talk about the issues that impact the working class of this country and the middle class.” Unlike Warren, he has met with voters and activists in Iowa and New Hampshire, and has three Iowa town-hall meetings scheduled for next month.

Furthermore, Vermont’s junior senator has long been a nationally known favorite in progressive circles. For years he has held court in weekly “Brunch With Bernie” segments on Thom Hartmann’s national radio show. He even can tout his ability to work across the aisle, having recently negotiated bipartisan deals to reform the Veterans Administration and audit the Federal Reserve.

Yet when Sanders teases a presidential run on CNN or MSNBC or ABC, he is largely greeted with silence from his progressive brethren. There are isolated voices of encouragement: the Progressive Democrats of America, The Nation’s John Nichols, The New Republic’s Michael Kazin. But nothing that resembles the enthusiasm generated by everyone’s favorite non-candidate, Warren.

What gives? Why is the left ignoring the option – the only option, really – that’s right under its nose?

Sure, it is implausible that a self-described “socialist” with a gruff Brooklyn demeanor could actually win. But as the Washington Post reported last month, "Even Clinton’s skeptics acknowledge the difficulty of derailing her juggernaut," so their hope is that a primary challenge can "shape the debate and pull Clinton to the left on issues.”

Sanders, who has stressed that he would “not [be] running to attack Hillary Clinton,” is perfectly suited to play that role. A Clinton-Sanders primary – assuming Sanders could generate enough support to force Clinton to engage – would be serious debate over the issues progressives care about, not a personality clash with scorched-earth attacks that could weaken the eventual nominee for the general election.

Apparently, the reason for the lack of interest lies in progressives’ collective hunger for The Next Big Thing. For the economic populists, Warren’s mix of Okie folksy charm and Harvard intellect is a fresh face that can expand their gospel beyond the already converted. Sanders may have a case to make that he has real experience building ideologically diverse coalitions around populist issues. But today’s Vermont is so deep blue, people have forgotten than Vermont was much more Republican when he first won statewide in 1990.

For leftists more interested in opposing war and government surveillance, Sen. Rand Paul is the Next Big Thing. Nader, for example, has been more interested talking up Paul’s prospects for building a left-right coalition against Clinton than promoting Sanders (though that could be because Nader has publicly complained that Sanders doesn’t return his phone calls).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But for most on the left, Paul's libertarianism is a bridge too far. And for Warren, a presidential run is a bridge too far. Sooner or later, progressives who want a primary challenge from the populist left will realize that their choice is Sanders or nobody.

The risk for them is that they will come to that conclusion too late.

As Yahoo! News reported, the one thing that would stop Sanders from taking the plunge is a lack of grassroots support and infrastructure. In Sanders' words, "It's easy for me to give a good speech. … It is harder to put together a grassroots organization of hundreds of thousands … of people prepared to work hard and take on the enormous amounts of money that will be thrown against us."

If the grassroots doesn't show up for Sanders soon, he may decide that a run wouldn't make enough of an impact to be worth the trouble. In other words, pine for Warren too long, and you may get no progressive primary challenge at all.

[Subtitle:] The Las Vegas Review-Journal obtained a copy of the former Secretary of State's standard speaking contract, as well as supporting emails, related to her agreement to be the keynote speaker at the UNLV Foundation dinner in October. The documents outline extravagant demands for luxury accommodations and private jet travel, as well as control for even the most minute details.

She may not be president yet, but that's not stopping her from staying in the presidential suite.

Hillary Clinton reportedly demands the best amenities money can buy for speaking engagements, according to the Las Vegas Review-Journal, insisting in meticulously detailed contracts on luxury hotel suites, private jets, a huge stipend for food for her aides and final approval of all moderators.

The Review Journal obtained the contract that the former Secretary of State agreed on to deliver a high-profile Oct. 13 speech at a University of Nevada - Las Vegas fundraiser, discovering that Clinton requires control over every minute detail.

But even more eye-opening was the undisguised opulence that the former first lady demands for herself and for her entourage — a list of conditions so grand they could rival those made by famous rock stars.

Clinton, according to her standard speaking contract, outlined in a May 31, 2013, email obtained by the Review-Journal, typically asks for $300,000 right off the bat.

She also requires for herself round-trip transportation on a chartered jet, such as a "Gulfstream 450 or larger jet" — which can cost up to $38 million — in addition to round-trip business class travel for two advance staffers.

The contract also makes room for high-end lodging, stipulating that accommodations include "a presidential suite for Secretary Clinton and up to three (3) adjoining or contiguous single rooms for her travel aides and up to two (2) additional single rooms for the advance staff."

Clinton also demands that meals and incidentals be covered for her, her travel aides and her advance staff and a $500 travel stipend for out-of-pocket costs for her lead travel aide.

In addition, she requests final approval "of all moderators or introducers" at the event itself.

Clinton, however, appeared to be willing to negotiate for her appearance at this fall's UNLV Foundation dinner, agreeing to cut her fee to $225,000, according to documents obtained by the Review-Journal.

Clinton also purportedly agreed to pay for her desired luxury hotel and transportation — both of which are typically included in her standard contract — herself.

The reason for the discount is unclear, but she appeared to make up the difference in the amount of control she'll have over the event.

Clinton, the contract outlines, will attend the event for no more than 90 minutes, will pose for no more than 50 photos with no more than 100 people and won't have to share the stage with anyone.

"It is agreed that Speaker will be the only person on the stage during her remarks," stated the May 13 contact the Harry Walker Agency — the highfalutin public speaking firm that represents her — signed with UNLV to have Clinton deliver the keynote address at its annual Foundation dinner at the Bellagio.

Clinton also demanded that any press coverage, audio- and video-taping of the speech be banned; the only evidence the speech will even have been made, in fact, will be recorded by a stenographer whose transcription, according to the documents obtained, can only be given to Clinton.

The stenographer's $1,250 fee, however, will be covered by the UNLV Foundation, the Review-Journal reported.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The contract also prohibits the UNLV Foundation from promoting the speech on radio or television. Clinton's team okayed mail and website advertisements, but blueprints of those must be approved in advance by the former first lady's staffers.

The distinguished dinner is expected to generate at least tens of millions of dollars for the foundation. About 1,000 people — among the wealthiest and most powerful donors in Nevada business and politics — are expected to attend, buying up tables for either $20,000, $10,000 or $5,000.

Clinton, whose representatives didn't immediately respond to requests to comment on this article, has come under increasing scrutiny in recent months for clumsy comments about her and former President Bill Clinton's wealth.

In June she told The Guardian that she and Bill aren't "truly well off" despite the enormous wealth they've earned, mostly through public speaking fees, since leaving the White House.

Just weeks before that, she told ABC News that the pair exited the West Wing "dead broke."

But the comments fell upon deaf ears as Americans were quickly reminded of the hefty fees the famous duo command on the public speaking circuit. Clinton has, by some estimates, earned at least $12 million just since leaving the Obama administration in February 2013.

New York Post: “Hillary is already insisting on staying in presidential suites”

By Kate Sheehy

August 18, 2014, 2:21 a.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton isn’t waiting to become president to enjoy the “suite’’ life.

The former first lady is already insisting on staying in the “presidential suite” of the world’s finest hotels, typically traveling to them on nothing less than a $39 million private Gulfstream G450 jet before collecting a $250,000-plus speaking fee, a new report says.

Just like the president, she sends an “advance’’ team to check out her accommodations and speech set-up before she touches down, according to the Las Vegas Review-Journal, which reviewed her standard speaking contract and other documents related to an upcoming Nevada visit.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton — a multimillionaire who infamously whined in June that she and her former presidential hubby weren't "truly well off'' and "pay ordinary income tax, unlike a lot of people'' — has a whole host of other demands, too.

Acting more like a rock star than former US senator and secretary of state, she insists on being "the only person on the stage during her remarks.''

Hillary also refuses to pose for no more than 50 photos with no more than 100 people at events, the paper said.

She balks at staying at any event longer than 90 minutes and won't allow press coverage of her speech, either.

In fact, the only person who can record her precious words of wisdom is a stenographer — paid for by the organization hosting her.

There can be no advertising of the event on TV, radio or billboards. Any mail or online ads must be approved in writing by her team.

Hillary is set to speak at a University of Nevada, Las Vegas Foundation fund-raiser in October for the cut-rate fee of $225,000.

Hubby Bill spoke at the event in 2012, raking in $250,000.

Hillary had initially asked for more than Bill — $300,000 — but her handlers apparently brought that figure down because they're providing the transportation.

Usually, Clinton's contract stipulates that she be given "round-trip transportation on a chartered private jet "e.g., a Gulfstream 450 or larger jet,'' plus round-trip business class travel for two advance staffers who will arrive up to three days in advance,'' the Review-Journal said.

As for her accommodations, "a presidential suite for Secretary Clinton and up to three adjoining or contiguous single rooms for her travel aides and up to two additional single rooms for the advance staff" are typically required.

A $500 stipend is also usually included for Clinton's lead travel aide, as well as money for meals and "incidentals'' — including phone calls — for Hillary and her staff.

She and her hubby have reportedly pulled in at least $100 million, mainly from speaking engagements in the past eight years.

Her Las Vegas speech will be held before the city's top movers and shakers.

Tables go for up to $20,000. Some individual tickets also are on sale for $200 a pop.

The Week: Speed Reads: "Hillary Clinton requires a 'presidential suite' for her speaking gigs"

By Jon Terbush

August 17, 2014

Landing Hillary Clinton for a speaking gig is a pricey venture, as the former secretary of State typically charges a couple hundred thousand dollars per event. And according to a contract obtained by the Las Vegas Review-Journal, securing Clinton also requires the would-be host to let her staff find some accommodations fit, at least in name, for a president.

Emails between Clinton and the University of Nevada concerning a scheduled October speech suggest a typical Clinton contract requires "hotel accommodations selected by Clinton's staff and including 'a presidential suite' for Secretary Clinton."

It's widely known that Clinton made millions in speaking fees since leaving the Obama administration, which has given her fiercest critics a new angle to attack her. Expect to see much more made over the coming months of Clinton's lavish, "presidential" travel.

Subject: Gessler responds

Dear Friend,

A quick update--after we sent the message below yesterday morning, Scott Gessler responded on a Denver radio show. Here's a transcript of Gessler from the Kelley and Company show on 710AM:

> Kelley: Are you expecting this to be nasty?
> Gessler: Oh, yeah, you're seeing it already...I've been attacked by the head of the Democratic State Party here. I have been attacked by ProgressNow*...and so these guys have been attacking me relentlessly. I mean this is just over the last week. I don't think they've done this for any other Republican at all. I think it shows you that they're scared of me.*

Scared? Hardly. The truth is, we can't wait to hold Gessler accountable for his years of incompetence, corruption, and partisan manipulation of our election system. Click here to help us do just that with your donation to ProgressNow Colorado.

The only thing that's "nasty" about this is Gessler's record. Thanks for doing your part to help us expose it.

Dear Friend,

fuggedaboudit.jpg

Last night, Colorado's corrupt Secretary of State Scott Gessler officially announced he is running for Governor of Colorado in 2014.

Gessler as Governor would be a nightmare for Colorado. Click here to donate to ProgressNow Colorado. Your gift will immediately be put to work holding Gessler accountable in 2014.

Scott Gessler's time as Secretary of State has been a sad story of incompetence and corruption. Gessler stepped into scandal almost immediately after taking office, when he announced his intention to "moonlight" for his former right-wing elections law firm. After a public outcry, Gessler backed away from that horrible idea--but he didn't stop there.

While Gessler spent enormous amounts of time and taxpayer money unsuccessfully searching for so-called "illegal voters," his voter registration systems failed and lost the registrations of hundreds of legal voters. Gessler has consistently sought to make voting harder by stopping mail ballots and purging so-called "inactive" legal voters.

Take a moment right now to make an investment to stop Scott Gessler with your donation to ProgressNow Colorado.

Perhaps the worst of Gessler's misdeeds came to light just this summer, when the Colorado Independent Ethics Commission determined that Gessler had "violated the public trust for private gain" by spending your taxpayer dollars to attend partisan political events like the Republican National Convention. Gessler was fined the maximum amount possible after the commission determined Gessler had used his office's discretionary account as a slush fund to pursue his own partisan agenda.

We at ProgressNow Colorado have spent more time holding Gessler accountable since taking office than any other right-wing politician in this state (and for good reason). Click here to donate and help us double down on our efforts to hold Gessler accountable. We're on the ground right now telling the truth about Gessler's record. We're not going to let Gessler get away with hiding from his incompetence, double dealing partisanship, and outright corruption.

But we need your help! Donate now to say "no" to the "Honey Badger."

Hello Herb, Susan, and Steve,

Happy New Year! I hope you're all well.

I wanted to give you a brief 2014 update from really rainy Washington. It would be helpful to set up a call soon as well as I have some questions interspersed below. I'll note that John's been gone a week, but he's already called to give me ideas, which was great. He sounds happy and I got to discuss much of this list with him as well.

Academic engagement

Three staff and I spent last weekend at the ASSA meetings in Philadelphia networking and drumming up interest. A few ASSA take-aways are:

- There is a real appetite for visiting scholar program. This was also underscored by Larry Katz/David Autor/Claudia Goldin. A key question here will be space.
- We definitely need in-house economists to network/identify the right people. The conference underscored my thinking that younger scholars are the way to go, but to hire one other senior person who can help me with the team.
- We want to make a splash at the ASSA next year — I think we should host a reception in a room close to either Berkeley or Harvard for our Research Advisory Board and grantees, to drum up excitement.
- Finally, I had a really good chat with Jim Poterba, who runs the NBER. He started off the conversation with his fears about us not paying overhead. I hear you on this, but it now feels like it means setting aside MIT/NBER as places to fund.

On the grant-making, the LOIs are coming in slowly and we sent out another reminder today to a large list. We have some good proposals already, but only a few so far. On the issue of a grant to Harvard/MIT, I had a nice chat with Autor/Goldin/Katz, but they are not biting. David said they were "fully funded," but they perked up at the idea of visiting fellows for their students/recent graduates. For me, it felt like a reversal from our November conversation. I'd like to discuss this with you.

Internal Research/product queue

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We are finally settling into sorting out our product queue. I'll have more details on this in the next update, but one thing I know is that we are planning to do an event for Thomas Piketty around his new (big, important) book coming out in March. The event will be April 15, which isn't the best, but it's what he can do. I'm writing reviews for a couple of places and want to make sure that we pull out all the stops to make sure we connect Emmanuel's co-author with DC.

Hiring/staffing:

Economists:

- We interviewed about 14 PhD candidates at ASSA, including Saez and Chetty students. One clear take-away is that our idea is attracting very high quality candidates. None of the candidates knew who was on our board, but they seemed excited by the job ad describing our mission. That felt like a good sign. I am playing with offering a title like "Fellow" or "Post-doctoral Fellow" for those who may want to consider going back to academia. This may be good for us/good for them.
- I also heard more confirmation that the young economist we've offered a job to (he hasn't accepted yet as he is waiting on his partner's job offers) is an excellent choice, so that felt good.
- I have a senior person ready to start as a visiting scholar from June 2014 through the academic year. Robert Lynch focuses on early childhood and immigration and has some nice model lying on how inequality in education affects growth. The topics will be both academically and politically relevant, they may help us connect more with the Russell Sage Foundation (Robert could manage a special issue of their new journal, tapping into our growing network), and he's a good manager and mentor and can help me guide a young team. Further, going this route means that I get some that I know is good and up to the job, without having to make a permanent commitment yet. With so much hiring, that's a bit of a relief since this will be a key position.

Communications/Publications:

- I have an excellent candidate for Senior Communications Director, Ed Paisley (and John agrees). Ed founded CAP's Editorial Team and spent a couple of decades as a financial journalist. He knows media, he's an excellent editor who knows how to work with academics, and he's a proven excellent manager. The offer is on Neera's desk and if she says yes, then we'll be able to offer him the position.

Fundraising. Before John went to the WH, he gave me some people to meet — David Beier, Phil Murphy, and Ira Fishman — and I've had time to talk to two so far:

- David, who has extensive political and business networks, works a couple blocks from your office and was eager to help. He sent us a check for around $2k, so we now have two funders! He suggested he could perhaps pull together a San Francisco meeting of business leaders. He also said that, at John's urging, he'd like to join the Steering Committee. I'd like to talk this over with you. He says you have met, but I will send over a bio and hopefully we can set up a time to discuss this.
- Phil was most recently the Ambassador to Germany and an old friend of John's. He offered to put together a meeting of smart business leaders in NYC and to serve as an informal advisor (he may take a position where he could not sit on any boards). John recommended he play a chair role in his absence and we'll see whether he can actually do that.

On my to do list is to follow up on all the foundation recommendations you sent and I will likely have questions, so let's add that to our call agenda, too. My deadline for that is that I will be in NYC in mid-February and I'll need to start scheduling the round of meetings.

I hope we talk soon and please let me know if you have any comments/concerns/questions.

Best,

Heather

I would prefer an ally (congressman polis and/or LCV) Who have strong bone fides on the environment to whack sander's for taking an irresponsible position and in doing so, threatening real progress on frack fluid disclosure and air quality regulations. This is yet another promise he can't keep.

I think we will be forced to weigh in by sanders and of course we have to state our position: it's a transitional energy--and we need to go green. But that is a very soft response that sounds better if Bernie is being hit by the left.

I would watch our tone and not sound too pro-fracking. A reluctant tone is a better fit for dem caucus goers (it's a transition energy. It's not great but it allows us to get to where we want to be)

What does that mean? A complete 100% fracking ban. There is no elected dem and I believe no enviro group that takes this position. In fact, such an extreme position threatens the progress of common-sense safety measures like frack fluid disclosure and methane capture/air quality regulations.

The Denver Post Editorial Board could really smack him for this. This is tricky waters for caucus goers but his language may leave him vulnerable.

Jared Polis is a regarded as a leader of the regulating fracking team in CO and his argument is reforms, not a ban.

"Fracking can endanger our drinking water and threaten our climate"

For the fact check: The threaten our climate is based on methane released in the air when extracting natural gas from the ground. Colorado mandates oil and gas pay for methane capture technology to prevent the potent green house gas from escaping and the state issues large fines to bad actors. Natural gas burns cleaner than other traditional energies so the "threatens our climate" is about methane released during extraction which Colorado has already addressed.

Still really tough for us to talk about.

Look, John - President Obama needs a Democratic majority.

We'd be able to finally put this Tea Party crazy to rest and get the job done for Americans. We'd be able to raise the minimum wage, ensure fair pay for women, pass environmental reforms - and so much more.

The Tea Party doesn't care about doing ANY of that stuff. That is why before they come back to Washington, we need your help to break 10,000 grassroots donations.

Subject: Urgent: IL call

Tim Mapes: 217 801-2656

NOTE; TIME IS TIGHT: the bill to change the primary needs to be introduced Tuesday to get through both chambers before the assembly adjourns.

Goal: for Daley to call Speaker Madigan's COS Tim Mapes. Ideally, Daley would also have his friend Mike McClain call Mapes with the same message.

Overview:
The overall goal is to move the IL primary out of mid March, where they are currently a lifeline to a moderate Republican candidate after the mostly southern Super Tuesday. IL was a key early win for Romney in 12.
Our preference would be for them to move all the way to May, but if they at least move to April 12 or April 19 they will have the day to themselves and presumably garner a lot of coverage. They will also be influencing a big northeast primary day on April 26.
They will receive a bonus of 10% extra delegates if they move to April and 20% if they move to May. Mapes has said repeatedly they don't care about that.
As we discussed, they don't really care about being helpful and feel forgotten and neglected by POTUS. The key point is that this is not an Obama ask, but a Hillary ask. And the Clintons won't forget what their friends have done for them. It would be helpful to feel out what path, if any, we have to get them to yes. This will probably take some pushing.
Thanks again for doing this!

Subject:	Nightly Labor Update

Good evening-

1. HRC's presentation via google hang out (first time!) to the UAW Executive Board will take place this Wednesday, August 12th. HRC will be in the Nevada Conference room. O'Malley will be in person in Detroit and Sanders will be participating remotely. Over the weekend we turned in UAW's questionnaire. These two steps initiate the UAW endorsement process for the first time.

2. Carpenters-HRC will be visiting the Carpenters Training Facility on August 18th, and the campaign will be providing a video for their late August Convention. Carpenters are suggesting a possible Labor Day endorsement of HRC in Iowa. President McCarron would meet HRC for a short endorsement event. I wanted to flag this for everyone. I have confidentially mentioned this to Matt Paul as well.

3. National Nurses United-I expect that NNU will endorse Sanders before the end of this month. I'm hosting a call with AFT tomorrow to have nurses on the ready for response. Research has also provided HRC's nurse legislative record (which is very good). I have flagged this for Communications as well. I want to be ready with our response when this comes out. I have heard from the IA team that NNU is filming a TV commercial in IA. Any other ideas for pushback are welcome!

4. IAM Endorsement Friday, August 14th-IAM conducted a internal poll of their members. HRC wins the general election in this poll and beats all other Democratic candidates close to 6 to 1. The campaign is preparing for their endorsement roll out this week.

5. I am monitoring the Keystone announcement and am in connection with policy on the issue related to the building trades.

6. Scheduling Requests:

AFSCME: Need to confirm date for IA Town Hall. Either August 26th or September 6th. They prefer Sept. 6th but can make either work.

AFT: Randi is now reaching out about locking in teacher town hall. I understand September is most likely the month. Providing them a date would be very very helpful. As you know AFT, has been our champion post endorsement.

Final video posted on AFT webpage:
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=80uq4d9figM&feature=youtu.be

NEA: Anxious to lock in the teletown hall date and a Back to School event in September. After private conversations with NEA, completing these two events will allow them to recommend endorsement on October 1st. NEA will be a pivotal endorsement pick up for March primary/caucus states (in addition to early states) where they have large membership and past caucus captains.

Report: Right wing funders are manufacturing news and driving public policy in Pennsylvania

Pennsylvania Independent is part of a nationwide movement to drive the news with pseudo-reporting by conservative advocacy organizations posing as legitimate news operations

HARRISBURG, PA--A new report exposes a disturbing new movement to supplant genuine investigative reporting with pseudo-reporting by right-wing advocacy organizations. These advocacy groups, posing as legitimate news bureaus, are well funded and have become accepted as objective news organizations by many mainstream newspapers, television and radio news operations.

According to the report by Keystone Progress, this insidious infiltration of legitimate news operations is led by the Franklin Center for Government and Public Integrity. Its local affiliate in Pennsylvania is the Pennsylvania Independent.

The report outlines how these advocacy groups are funded and shows how they have become accepted as objective news organizations by many mainstream newspapers, television and radio news operations. In fact, this network of "news" outlets run by the Franklin Center claims that it already "provides 10 percent of all daily reporting from state capitals nationwide."

Key Findings

- Despite its claims, the Pennsylvania Independent is far from being independent or unbiased.

- The Pennsylvania Independent is run by the far-right Franklin Center for Government and Public Integrity, which has close ties to the American Legislative Exchange Council, the Koch brothers, the Tea Party, Conservative Political Action Conference, Heritage Foundation and numerous other conservative causes and candidates.

-MORE-

- The Franklin Center lists dozens of conservative think tanks, many of which are members of the rightwing State Policy Network, as state affiliates. The Commonwealth Foundation is one of those conservative think tanks.
- The Independent is staffed by conservative ideologues who have been active in conservative causes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Ninety-five percent of the Franklin Center's known funding comes from the Donors Capital Fund and the related Donors Trust, "the dark-money ATM of the conservative movement" that receives significant funding from the Koch brothers.
- Mainstream legitimate news operations are ignoring the clear conservative advocacy intentions of the Pennsylvania Independent and are republishing its "reporting" as legitimate, unbiased news.

The full report is available online at http://www.scribd.com/doc/159802911/Driving-the-News (also attached)

The report was produced by Keystone Progress. Keystone Progress is Pennsylvania's largest progressive advocacy organization with over 350,000 subscribers. Keystone Progress embraces a pragmatic and flexible approach to advancing equal opportunity for all, the protection of individual freedoms, and democratic, transparent and people-oriented (rather than corporate) government.

-END-

Keystone Progress is Pennsylvania's largest online progressive organization, with over 350,000 subscribers. KP uses the Internet and new media to organize online at the state and local level; and utilizes cutting-edge earned media strategies to promote a progressive agenda and counter right-wing misinformation.

Subject: [big campaign] Frist: "I Would End Up Voting For" Health Bill

Also: Frist noted that Republicans themselves voted for a Medicare prescription drug bill that would have established a version of a public plan--with the government negotiating directly with drug companies--if private-sector competition had failed to materialize. That is similar to the approach that Republican Senator Olympia Snowe is taking with her amendment to establish a public option with a "trigger ."

Bill Frist on Health Bill: I'd Vote For It

Posted by Karen Tumulty Friday, October 2, 2009 at 3:21 pm

2 Comments • Trackback (0) • Related Topics: congress , health care , republicans , senate , bill frist

Or so the former Senate Republican Leader, a surgeon who has written a new book on health care, told me a few minutes ago in an interview.

Were he still in the Senate, "I would end up voting for it," he said. "As leader, I would take heat for it. ... That's what leadership is all about."

This is not to say that Frist is entirely happy with everything that is in the bill.

For one thing, he doesn't think it does nearly enough to bring costs under control. In his view, it does not fundamentally change the incentives that providers now have to provide more care, rather than better care. "There is really nothing to bend the cost curve," he says.

And Frist also predicts it will extend coverage to only 20 million or so additional Americans--far short of true universal coverage. Given the fiscal constraints, he says, he says a better approach would be to provide a more bare-bones package of benefits known as "catastrophic coverage" that would insure more people.

However, he strongly supports other aspects of the bill--most notably, its requirement that individuals be required to purchase coverage, if they do not receive health insurance through their employers or under government programs. And he also lauds the provisions that would eliminate practices that allow insurance companies to discriminate against people based on their health history, including pre-existing conditions.

Frist also faults some in his own party for injecting alarmism into the debate. "Clearly, the death panels and public plan arguments have been overblown," he says. Frist noted that Republicans themselves voted for a Medicare prescription drug bill that would have established a version of a public plan--with the government negotiating directly with drug companies--if private-sector competition had failed to materialize. That is similar to the approach that Republican Senator Olympia Snowe is taking with her amendment to establish a public option with a "trigger ."

While Frist believes that the bill will pass, he worries that the Obama Administration and Congress have not given enough attention to what happens next: the implementation. The first few years are likely to be rough, he predicts. States will be struggling to set up new marketplaces for insurance coverage, their medicaid rolls will grow, taxes will go up, and consumers will not yet see the benefits. "The Republicans will go wild," using the start-up difficulties as a tool for fundraising and for making their case in the next election, Frist says. "In the Congress, nobody's thinking about that." His advice for the Obama Administration: "Stay nimble," and be prepared to make adjustments as difficulties arise.

Dear John, Jake and Huma:

Greetings from Spetses, a small island in Greece's Argo-Saronic gulf (not far from Leonidio). I wanted to make sure you saw the article that Admiral Jim Stavrides published last week about the repercussions of a possible Grexit. Although things are moving quickly here, Jim's article is still very poignant, and like him, I agree that it is extremely important that the EU and Tsipras come to terms that will allow Greece to stay in the Eurozone.

http://foreignpolicy.com/2015/07/01/what-are-the-geostrategic-implications-of-a-grexit-greece-nightmare-eu/

I also wanted to let you know that the Washington Post review of "Madam Ambassador" has spurred more reviews, concentrating on US engagement with Hungary and Viktor Orban. Freedom House just posted this in-depth review:
https://freedomhouse.org/blog/shedding-light-hungary-viktor-orban#.VZwRd_lVhBd

I plan to be in Greece until next month. But also wanted to check in about the process for setting up advisory teams. Is there any news?

All best, Eleni

Subject:	ATTY CLIENT PRIV Call Update

hey john -- wow. so jen and i called into the call that mary pat organized to deal with the fallout from FFA donors re the CDA ad. on the call was mary pat, marc elias, amy dacey, david brock, tom mattzie, frank smith, susie mchugh, tara mcguiness, paul begala for a few minutes. joe sandler (CDA lawyer) was not on the call. (marc elias, lyn utrecht, joe sandler and my team are getting on the phone today to discuss some of CDA's thinking. i can update on you that as well. we are confused about what's been happening and once get a better sense of it, will confer with out CDA on the call, and then i'll be in a better position to advise you.)

here is a very quick summary of this call -- jen feel free to add:

1. Mary Pat is calling the FFA donors named in the NPR ad to ask them to please not to talk to the press for 24 hours. she will then get them talking points that describes in part what FFA vs CDA is, and i imagine what their money supported. those talking points will originate from amy dacey, to be vetted by marc elias. i assume amy will send them to you as well, but will specifically ask for that.

2. David Brock was very concerned that no CDA plan had been in place to address possible concerns raised by the story that they knew would break -- esp regarding the impact on donors. i.e. no one at FFA knew how this ad was going to be filed (on this i will note that i actually understand that CDA did not need to list FFA on the filing -- but i will confirm this), so that donors could be contacted in advance. he was concerned that the CDA bd/prospective bd had no idea, nor did FFA. (in this context, somebody mentioned -- i think it was susie -- that you were on the CDA call making decision to run the ad. i said that while i couldn't speak for you, i'm sure you had no idea what they were planning to do with filings. that that was not your role on the call.)

3. It's not clear to me what the press strategy is -- there was some support for trying to get a more full bodied FFA story in the press. Jen can talk more about that.

4. Begala talked positively about the press coverage, but about the need for there always to be a lawyer on the call on this stuff. On that, we'll try to set up some sort of system so that we know what's happening.

let me know if you want to discuss or want more info. thx.

Subject:	HRC

Hi. Been doing some thinking about HRC and how you'd answer the question why she's the best person for the job now. So as I wait to board my flt home, thought I would share some with you.

WHY HILLARY: NARRATIVE

America is back. We have recovered from the worst of the Great Recession and ready to tackle the remaining big challenge - restoring opportunity and economic growth to the middle class.

Hillary Clinton is the person for the job. The Clintons know how to make the economy work for the middle class, not just the wealthy.

Turning the ship around for the middle class won't be easy, some of the problems are decades In the making, result of global trends. It will require someone who not only knows how to harness the best of America and all her strengths and make the economy work for everyone, but is indefatigable enough to stick with it, get up every day fighting, and do the hard work to finish the job. Hillary is that person.

WHY HILLARY: GUIDEPOSTS

1. Make a virtue of her longevity, refusal to go away. Embrace all the Clinton-ness - the forty years in politics, the decades on the national stage, etc.. Maybe folks had Clinton fatigue at one point, now they are just seen as part of the fabric of America. (Hillary won't go away, she is indefatigable, she just keeps at it, and you can trust her to get the job done.)

2. Knowing she will be hit from left in the primary (and maybe the general depending on who R candidate is) for privileged, sheltered life; Wall Street ties; rich doing well under WJC; etc, don't try to make her a big populist. The middle class should vote for her because what they ultimately need is someone who can get the job done, not burn Jamie Dimon at the stake.

3. Think the press will buy notion that she's the candidate for the middle class since that was considered to be her strength against Obama in 08. Just can't go overboard and tie her personal story too much to middle class struggles. She was certainly raised with middle class values and work ethic, but her strength and distinguishing characteristic as a candidate is that she is the one with the experience and tenacity to get the job done for the middle class.

4. Embrace the teary Hillary from New Hampshire. As I recall she said at the time that her motivation for running was not wanting to see America go back. I thought that was the true Hillary at her most earnest level. Have to show that side of what motivates her beyond personal ambition.

Subject:	Update for Ted Strickland supporters only

Friend,

This is an urgent update for Ted supporters only:

- We just learned yet another Super PAC is placing a major six-figure ad buy against our campaign next month
- Portman and his allies have now spent up to $11.8 million against Ted
- Thanks to our powerful grassroots movement, every major poll still shows Ted ahead
- But that could change at any moment

The very first fundraising deadline of 2016 is in less than two days -- this couldn't be a more important moment for Ted's campaign.

To fight back against the dark money attacks and to keep Ted in the lead, we've set an aggressive goal of 30,000 grassroots supporters. Now we have two options: We can use the next 48 hours to show Portman and his allies our true grassroots strength OR we can sit on the sidelines and watch as dark money buys this election. The choice is yours.

Ted Strickland for SENATE

Friend,

First, the good news: Every recent poll shows Ted ahead. That's not a bad way to start the year!

But here's the bad news: It's still January but Portman, Rove, the Kochs, and their insider friends have already spent an estimated $11,000,000 against Ted -- much of it in dark, unchecked money. This is real money, and it will have a real negative impact on Ted's campaign. There's so much at stake: the next Senate will likely approve more than one Supreme Court justice, and that'll have real consequences for women's health and workers rights. With so much at stake, there's only one thing to do before the first big fundraising deadline of 2016:

WE MUST RESPOND.

So here's what we need: we're 239 online donations away from reaching 30,000 total donors before our end of month deadline. Let's show Rove and the Kochs that they made a huge mistake by hitting our goal and sending Ted to the Senate. Can you help?

If you've saved payment info with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately.

We have to show Portman that his dark money billionaires are no match for our grassroots movement to take back Ohio. Ted's fighting for auto workers, teachers, and everyday folks like you, not Super PACs and billionaires who are looking out for their favorite Washington insider: Rob Portman.

Thanks,

David Bergstein

Mr. Podesta,

Below is a communication from Congressman Alan Lowenthal. He enjoyed meeting you at the DCCC a few weeks ago and asked that I get the following to you.

Kind Regards,

Tim Hysom
Chief of Staff
Rep. Alan Lowenthal

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I am writing to you about my Senior Policy Advisor Frances Marquez who is seeking a position on Hillary Clinton's Campaign for President in the national political, policy or field areas of your team. Frances hails from my district, is the daughter of Mexican-American parents who attended segregated schools in LA County and worked on President Bill Clinton's Campaign in 1992 and 1996. She did an outstanding job organizing for the campaign and was asked to work for the Clinton Administration in 1992. She decided to obtain her Ph.D. in political science, otherwise you would know about her outstanding campaign work.

In the 1992 Clinton Campaign, Frances was trained to conduct an indigenous precinct leader operation where organizers recruit volunteers from their home precincts to take ownership of their neighborhood, recruit voters and ensure they make it to the polls on election day. She was responsible for 52 precincts and recruited 45 precinct leaders who reported to her the final 3 months of the election.

In 1996 Frances served as the Regional Organizer in East Los Angeles and the San Gabriel Valley where she managed Latino elected officials, staff and eight campaign offices, a majority of which she obtained through donations. Her region had the highest Latino voter turnout in the nation which is documented in the book Awash in the Matinstream: Latino Politics and the 1996 Elections. Frances has also served on Democratic Caucus Chairman Xavier Becerra, Secretary Solis and President Obama's 2008 and 2012 campaigns in Colorado and North Carolina.

Moreover, Frances served as my Legislative Director for two years and formulated legislative initiatives for the following issue areas including defense, labor, trade, manufacturing, Latinos, disability, foreign affairs committee work for the Western Hemisphere, Middle East and the Subcommittee on Terrorism, Nonproliferation and Trade.

I have trusted Frances with conducting outreach to my colleagues, constituents and stakeholder groups on my behalf and she has done outstanding and important work. She is a team player, works well with others and I always receive compliments about her professionalism, enthusiasm and hard work. Most recently she was able to recruit 81 members of the House to sign on to a human rights letter on Mexico to Secretary Kerry which received international press. Frances knows the formula to help Hillary Clinton win as she helped Bill Clinton in 1992 and 1996 by organizing precinct leaders in local communities, knocking on doors and asking for one vote at a time. I give Frances my highest recommendation and ask that you meet with her and consider her for a position on the campaign.

Sincerely,

Alan Lowenthal

"If Siegelman's guilty, then so, too, are most of the politicians in Washington"- Washington Spectator

Dear Jack,

The Washington Spectator featured an article recently asking President Obama to pardon Don Siegelman while bypassing the DOJ, suggesting that there are people in that august body who want to keep irregularities in the Siegelman Case out of the spotlight.

Scott Horton, the author of the article, is a specialist in political prosecution. He had been consulting with the State Department to prepare US Justice liaisons in former Soviet nations learn "How to Spot Political Prosecution" when the Siegelman case showed up on his radar. A contributing editor at Harper's, Scott has been writing about Don Siegelman's Case for nine years now, ever since 2007, concerned early on by the stark similarities between the prosecution of Don Siegelman and Political Prosecution in Soviet block countries.

Since Scott Horton first began writing about the Siegelman case nine years ago, the story has continued to unfold. Failed appeals have left supporters bewildered while an innocent former Governor endures an unjust imprisonment punctuated by a lengthy stint in the SHU. We have seen a notorious key player in the Siegelman case, Karl Rove, both retire as White House consultant to avoid investigation into his role in this case and fail in his attempt to regain the White House with yet another Bush presidency. Another infamous key player in the case, Judge Mark Fuller, under pressure from his friends and enemies, retired from the bench for conduct most unbecoming a Judge.

This story is far from finished. There are several little known facts revealed in this article that make it worth reading. To learn which high level career attorney obstructed investigations into the Siegelman Case read the Scott Horton article now .

President Must Issue Pardon

Horton concludes that the President must pardon Don Siegelman without consulting the DOJ because the Department is too conflicted to do the right thing. Horton quotes a source saying that the "way DOJ managed this case, if brought to light, would do real harm to the reputation of the department."

No kidding.

Mr. John Podesta
Co-Chairman
Obama Transition Team
Chicago, Illinois

Dear John:

In the spirit of Barack Obama's election as our next President and the opportunities it gives our nation to rebuild our international alliances and resolve age old conflicts, I submit to you for your careful consideration my candidacy for the post of Undersecretary of State for Public Diplomacy.

Privileged to be the first American Muslim and the first American of South Asian descent to be appointed by President Bill Clinton as the United States Ambassador, I feel confident that I can successfully undertake and fulfil the mission objectives of this position. This post, as you know, was created by President Clinton in 1999 with Evelyn Lieberman as its first appointee.

Please find attached my brief biographical profile for your kind review. To summarize, I consider the following to further strengthen my candidacy:

1. I have the experience, qualifications, background and stature for the position.
2. As someone already vetted in the past and confirmed by the Senate, I am confident that any such future exercises would be relatively easier.
3. I add diversity which could also be helpful in dealing with many nations and factions hostile to US interest.

Thank you again for your time and consideration. With respect and admiration, Osman.

PROGRESSIVE TURNOUT PROJECT

John -- many of our other supporters have written to tell us that this is their favorite email we've ever sent.

Please take a minute to learn more about the Progressive Turnout Project's mission and how we're going to achieve our goals.

When you're done, a contribution of just $5 or more would have a tangible impact on Democratic voter turnout in 2016:

http://go.turnoutpac.org/Donate

What is the Progressive Turnout Project?

In 2014, the U.S. had its lowest federal election turnout in 70 years. As a result, Democrats lost. Badly.

So two months ago, a group of Democratic campaign veterans from President Obama's home state of Illinois formed an organization with the mission to increase Democratic voting turnout rates for the 2016 election. We chose to call it a "Project" because low turnout cannot be fixed overnight -- this issue requires a long-term, ongoing investment of time, resources and energy.

Fortunately, we know the most effective way to improve Democratic turnout. Study after study has proven that one-on-one conversations, especially in person, are by far the most effective way to persuade citizens that don't always vote to go to the polls.[1]

We have to raise the funds to build our organization and help us plan for 2016 so that we can execute our ground game strategy effectively from the get-go. This is why we have an important holiday season budget deadline looming this Wednesday.

The support we've received in three short months has blown us away:

- We count more than 327,OOO Americans among our supporters
- 1O,368 supporters have chipped in at least $5 to become Original Members
- Our average grassroots donation since Thanksgiving is just $14.59

John, this is a great start, but we have so much further to go. It is imperative that we hit our budget goal and we need 5OO more Original Members before our December 16 deadline to do so -- but we have just 3 days to get there.

Chip in $5 (more is OK, too!) before Wednesday's deadline to become an Original Member of the Progressive Turnout Project:

How is the Progressive Turnout Project going to improve Democratic and Progressive Turnout?

In a word: organizing. Field organizing, commonly referred to as "the ground game," is the most overlooked aspect of political campaigns. But in the age of Citizens United, on-the-ground organizing is the biggest advantage Democrats have.

President Obama's ground game left John McCain and Mitt Romney in the dust. And now, we're seeing presidential candidates like Bernie Sanders and Hillary Clinton pour resources into building massive field operations of their own.

Our plan is to launch robust field campaigns in many of the tightest races across the country. By taking advantage of nationwide grassroots support, we can build the kind of targeted, local campaigns that previously only Presidential campaigns have been able to afford.

Furthermore, research has shown that one-on-one conversations, as opposed to mail and television ads, are immensely effective. A study by two professors at Yale University found that a well-trained organizer having just one face-to-face conversation with a voter boosts the likelihood of the voter going to the polls by 20%.[2]

Put simply, one-on-one conversations are the game-changer that can help Democrats retake the Majority in 2016.

Will this really make a difference?

YES -- we wouldn't be doing this if we weren't confident that our data-driven approach can impact elections.

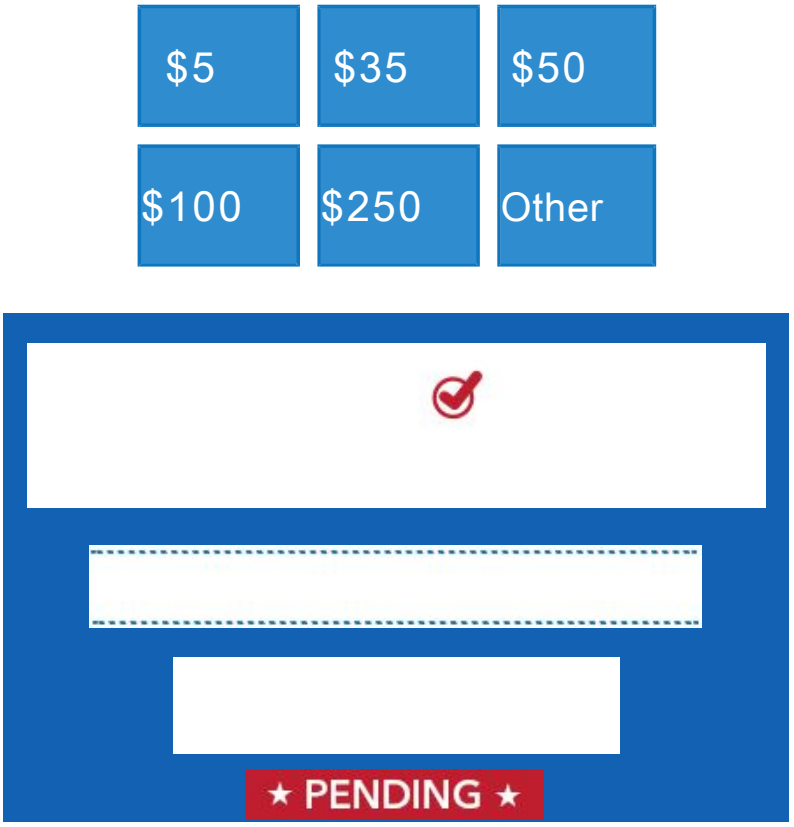

Field organizing is the most effective way to persuade voters who might otherwise not vote to go to the polls -- and its potential has barely been tapped.

Experts agree that turnout efforts can swing an election by as much as five points. As a frame of reference, in the past two elections, 61 Congressional races were won by 5% or less. Michele Bachmann (ugh), for example, won by just over 1% in 2012.

A robust Democratic ground game can be the difference between two more years of Mitch McConnell and Paul Ryan setting the agenda or a Democratic Majority ready to work with the next Democratic President of the United States.

The electoral math shows that taking back the majority will require us winning races projected to be purple or Republican-leaning. The only way to win these contests is to buck the conventional wisdom and find new ways to win. We believe that building an army of trained field organizers is the way forward.

Chip in $5 -- or whatever you can afford -- to become an Original Member of the Progressive Turnout Project:

http://go.turnoutpac.org/Donate

Thanks for your time and support,

- The entire Progressive Turnout Project team

Greetings, announcements@ recipients. The long winter of our discontent is behind us. The songbirds are singing, the tourists are in bloom – spring has truly sprung. That means it's time for my annual message promoting Bike to ~~Work~~ Campus Day .

This year it's Friday, May 15. As before, I'm determined to convince at least one person who's never biked to the Law Center to give it a shot that day. If you live anywhere near my route from Arlington to the Law Center , I can meet you at your home. If your bike needs a basic tune up, I can do that too. And if my route isn't near your home, perhaps another Law Center bicycle commuter's is. The Bike to Campus Directory is sortable by zip code.

For those of you who don't know me, I've been working at the Law Center since 2006. I started riding my bike to work in 2007. After marriage and having kids, it's probably the best decision I've made as an adult. Bicycle commuting is stress-free, predictable, cheap, great exercise, and sometimes the views are spectacular.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

You may be wondering: Is it dangerous? Well, no means of transportation is completely risk free. If you know how and where to ride (this is where I can be of assistance!), bicycling in and around DC is quite safe. I've been towing my son in a trailer to the Law Center for over a year if that helps to convince you.

So please consider biking to campus May 15, and please let me know if I can be of assistance.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

STATEMENT ON HIV AND AIDS

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I said something inaccurate when speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. I made a mistake, plain and simple.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.

We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This issue is important to me. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with about 50,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, almost 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. That is absolutely inexcusable.

I believe there's even more we can – and must – do together. For starters, let's continue to increase HIV and AIDS research and invest in the promising innovations that research is producing. Medications like PrEP are proving effective in preventing HIV infection; we should expand access to that drug for everyone, including at-risk populations. We should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide healthcare to those with HIV and AIDS. We should call on states to reform outdated and stigmatizing HIV criminalization laws. We should increase funding for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses and drug costs, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge patients by jacking up the price of lifesaving medications.

We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them and to future generations to continue that fight together. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. As president, I promise you that I will not let up until we reach that goal. We will not leave anyone behind.

Nick -- I am officially handing this off to you!

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I made a mistake in speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. My comment was just wrong.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.
To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.
The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.
If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.
We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.
I've been committed to this work for a long time. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. Have floated this idea in a couple of places, but putting it on this thread as well--we have two places online that we could respond to in terms of digital organizing perspective. There is an Out for Hillary group with 14k members that I think some kind of extended engagment over this would be helpful--an AMA with Dominic/ Robby/Dennis, a special Note (which is a long form format over Facebook), re-purposing the Medium piece there, etc would go a long way. Our other option is Reddit, which has an extremely vocal core of LGBT members, but I would prioritize this Facebook group, which is the largest LGBT community of Hillary's supporters I know. These are friendlies, they are already carrying water for us making sure the apology is out there, and they firmly sit in groups 1 and 2 that Dom identified.

Whatever we did to send our LGBT talking points to folks has really worked, they are popping up everywhere on the supporter Facebook groups.

Hi all,

I wanted to start a new thread to give a brief update about what I'm hearing from folks and get up to speed on how we're thinking of responding in the short and long term. (Sending to a smaller group from yesterday's call but please do loop in others who should be a part of this convo.)

First, as you can imagine, most people are expressing palpable anger and hurt over the comments. I won't belabor the point because I'm sure we all fielded calls, texts, tweets in the last 24 hours over this. But suffice to say, we aren't in a good place with the community right now.

If I had to break things down, I'd put people into three categories: 1) supporters who were horrified at the comment but accept the apology; 2) supporters who are angry and can only be mollified with a longer statement, tv appearance, roundtable, or something else big that shows she "gets it." They will continue to make hay in the meantime; and 3) Bernie folks who are happy to have a new line of attack.

What concerns me is that in that second group are a lot folks from Queer Nation, ACT UP, and other activists who are out, loud, and not afraid of direct action or aggressive confrontation. Given that, I'd love if we could build on yesterday's response -- and quickly. I don't want this to fester.

I assume we're prepping an answer for tomorrow's town hall, but has there been talk in the office of doing more today?

Looking ahead, is it possible to bump up an HIV / AIDS policy rollout? Is there any interest in putting a roundtable conversation or OTR together? (Robbie Kaplan has already volunteered GMHC.)

Would love to know where your heads are at and to be a part of the conversation today about next steps and moving forward.

Subject:	ICYMI: DOJ Says Secretary Clinton Had Authority to Delete Personal Emails

All:

This week, the Justice Department argued in a court filing that Secretary Clinton had the right to separate out personal emails and delete them--whether or not she used a personal email server or a government email.

Flagging for you several stories that address this.

Hope these are helpful - Thanks!

-AE

New York Times: Michael Shear: Justice Dept. Says Hillary Clinton Had Authority to Delete Certain Emails: The Justice Department said in a court filing this week that Hillary Rodham Clinton had the authority to delete emails that she did not believe were government records from the personal account that she exclusively used while secretary of state. The statement was made in connection with a lawsuit brought by the conservative group Judicial Watch. The group is seeking to force the government to search the server that housed Mrs. Clinton's account for messages related to a video ad the State Department aired in Pakistan. Judicial Watch contends the ad was an apology for the Internet video that the administration initially blamed for inciting the 2012 attacks on the American diplomatic compound in Benghazi, Libya.

Associated Press: Eric Tucker: JUSTICE DEPT. AFFIRMS CLINTON COULD DELETE PERSONAL EMAILS: Former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton had the right to delete personal emails from her private server, the Justice Department told a federal court. Lawyers for the government made the assertion in a filing this week with the U.S. District Court in Washington, part of a public records lawsuit filed by Judicial Watch, a conservative watchdog group that seeks access to Clinton's emails. Clinton, the former secretary of state and front-runner for the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination, has been dogged by questions about her use of a private email account for government business. She has said that she sent and received about 60,000 emails during her four years in the Obama administration, about half of which were personal and deleted. The others were turned over to the State Department.

Huffington Post: Ryan Reilly: Hillary Clinton Was Totally Free To Delete Personal Emails, DOJ Claims: Nothing to see here, says the government. Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton would have had the authority to delete personal emails even if she had used a government email address, instead of her own private server, government lawyers argued this week. Justice Department lawyers said in a court filing, first reported by Buzzfeed and The Washington Times, that there was "no question" Clinton had the authority to erase messages she thought were personal. The filing came as part of an ongoing legal battle over the government's failure to comply with Freedom of Information Act requests for Clinton's emails.

and delete personal email without supervision. In a little noticed brief, filed on Wednesday to a federal court, Department of Justice lawyers outlined a comprehensive defense of the contentious decision by Hillary Clinton to wipe the private email server she used as secretary of state: The attorneys assert that, regardless of whether she used a personal or government account, Clinton was within her legal right to handpick the emails that qualify as federal records — and to delete the ones she deemed personal. “There is no question that former Secretary Clinton had authority to delete personal emails without agency supervision — she appropriately could have done so even if she were working on a government server,” write the Justice Department attorneys, representing the State Department in the brief.

Subject: Drugs and Terror Monster Conjugated Aggravation in the Middle East

SALVATION OF MANKIND BY NARCOTIC VEGETATION ERADICATION FROM THE AIR BY UNMANNED AIRCRAFT VEHICLES

Mr. President,

Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles

Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows: 2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation causing its Desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:

1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health
19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV
Aloft in order to achieve Narcotic Vegetation Desertification with achievement for Posterity
20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!
21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up
Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!
22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 7000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!
23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.
24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able Indicating Monumental achievements. He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence
25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming
Strike on Terror Organizations by UAV Utilization might have been an Unprecedented Achievement of Entire Mankind and President Obama personally.
26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite
My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!
27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.
28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

Be successful

Gideon Rodeh

There is no justification losing an Election Campaign Ignominiously instead of emerging Victorious honorably! The Democrats should have mobilized the entire US Media attacking the Republican for an Exploitation of US Contingency to vote against their own Interests in favor of big Oil Corporations! Such incessant Transmissions would have been a very efficacious Deterrence for most Democratic families to abstain from voting against their own Interests!

Be successful

Gideon Rodeh

I never saw an invite. Did you send to the house? We did get an invite to a post-wedding brunch. Is the wedding on the 26th in RI?

Subject: [big campaign] Pew: Gas Prices Pump Up Support for Drilling

For those working on energy, there's been a reversal in opinion: slightly more now favor drilling and exploration over conservation. There's also been a 15-point swing in attitudes toward drilling in ANWR -- now 50 percent favor, and only 43 percent oppose, drilling in ANWR.

http://pewresearch.org/pubs/884/gas-prices

Gas Prices Pump Up Support for Drilling

Support for Conservation and Environmental Protection Declines, More Favor Drilling in ANWR

Figure

Amid record gas prices, public support for greater energy exploration is spiking. Compared with just a few months ago, many more Americans are giving higher priority to more energy exploration, rather than more conservation. An increasing proportion also says that developing new sources of energy -- rather than protecting the environment -- is the more important national priority.

The latest nationwide survey by the Pew Research Center for the People & the Press, conducted June 18-29 among 2,004 adults, also finds that half of Americans now support drilling in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, up from 42% in February.

The public's changing energy priorities are most evident in the growing percentage that views increased energy exploration -- including mining and drilling, as well as the construction of new power plants -- as a more important priority for energy policy than increased conservation and regulation. Nearly half (47%) now rates energy exploration as the more important priority, up from 35% in February. The proportion saying it is more important to increase energy conservation and regulation has declined by 10 points (from 55% to 45%).

Figure

In surveys dating to 2001, majorities or pluralities had consistently said that greater energy conservation and regulation on energy use and prices was more important than increased energy exploration.

Partisan Gap over Energy Exploration Disappears

Much of the increase in support for energy exploration has come among groups that previously viewed this as a less important priority than energy conservation -- young people, liberals, independents, Democrats, women and people who have attended college.

Figure

Fully half of people ages 18 to 29 (51%) now say expanding energy exploration is a more important priority for energy policy than increasing energy conservation and regulation; only about a quarter of young people (26%) expressed this view in February. The proportion of liberals who say expanded energy exploration is the more important priority also has doubled (from 22% to 45%).

The gender gap in attitudes about whether greater exploration or greater conservation is the more important priority has disappeared, as women have become much more supportive of expanded exploration (up 18 points).

Similarly, more independents (19 points) and Democrats (16 points) view increased energy exploration as the more important priority. About the same proportions of Democrats (46%) and Republicans (43%) now say expanded exploration, rather than increased conservation, should take precedence; in February, far more Republicans than Democrats expressed this view.

ANWR Drilling Still Politically Divisive

Figure

In contrast with overall opinions about energy exploration, views about drilling for oil and gas in ANWR remain politically divided. As was the case in February, about twice as many Republicans as Democrats favor drilling in ANWR (75% vs. 36%). Support for oil and gas drilling in the Alaska wildlife refuge has increased sharply among Republicans (12 points), but only modestly among Democrats (five points).

Support for ANWR energy drilling has increased across age groups, but Americans ages 65 and older continue to support this at much higher levels than do those younger than 30 (62% vs. 37%). More women favor ANWR drilling than in February, but women continue to be less supportive of drilling for oil and gas in the Alaska wildlife refuge than men (45% vs. 56%).

Iraq War Views Stable

Public opinion about the war in Iraq has changed little over the past few months. A narrow majority (52%) says that the U.S. military effort is not going well; 44% say things in Iraq are going very or fairly well. That is identical to the balance of opinion in April; in February, a slightly greater percentage (48%) said things were going well in Iraq.

Figure

The public also remains divided about whether to bring home U.S. troops as soon as possible (52%), or keep them there until the country is stabilized (43%). As in previous surveys, most of those who support a troop withdrawal from Iraq say it should gradual rather than immediate (35% gradual vs. 16% immediate).

By 50% to 42%, more Americans believe that the United States will succeed, rather than fail, in achieving its goals in Iraq. In April, opinion about whether the United States will succeed was a bit more closely divided (47% definitely/probably succeed vs. 46% definitely/probably fail).

As has been the case since October 2007, a majority of Americans (55%) believe the United States made the wrong decision in using military force in Iraq. Just 39% say the war was the right decision.

John –

I have not heard from the surrogate operation, and would still like to help.

In the same vein: Mack is increasingly being contacted by reporters (print and TV) asking him to comment on the campaign. Is there a good POC in the campaign for him to contact to ensure we have the campaign's position and latest thinking on issues of the day?

Thanks, and I hate to take your time with these requests – please delegate them down!

INTERMEDIATE REAL ESTATE FINANCING

Let's Get This Project Built - What's Market in Construction Lending Today?

Wednesday, March 30, 2016
01:00-2:30 pm ET
(12:00 pm CT, 11:00 am MT, 10:00 am PT)

Speakers: Barry Hines, Frost Brown Todd LLC, Louisville, KY; Everett Ward, Quarles & Brady LLP, Chicago, IL and Adam B. Weissburg, Cox, Castle & Nicholson LLP, Los Angeles, CA

This session will focus on leases from the lender's perspective. Because leases are the primary source of repayment for most commercial mortgage loans, the panel will discuss what's important to the lender and why.

Topics to be discussed include:

- Lender's Lease Diligence — ROFRs, Options to Purchase, Insurance Requirements, Casualty/Condemnation, Exclusives, Co-Tenancy and Landlord Financial Obligations.
- Tenant Estoppels and Certified Rent Rolls — What should these accomplish?
- Key Lease Provisions in Loan Documents — Lease Approval, Amendment and Termination Rights, Rollover Reserve Requirements, Cash Management Sweeps, Security Deposits and Lease Termination Fees.
- Subordination, Non-Disturbance and Attornment Agreements (SNDAs) — What, exactly, is subordinate and what is the lender trying to accomplish by requiring an SNDA?

Hi John. How are you? Pete suggested I email you here. As you may know, I've been working (in my CAPAF capacity) with a large coalition of reproductive rights groups to put together a consensus-based set of requests for a new administration. (You'll be receiving more details about this in the next bi-weekly report). We'd like to put in a pre-election request for a post-election meeting with the transition team. We didn't know who we should contact to request a meeting -- assuming the relevant person is already in place -- and neither did Juliana or Pete, so they thought I should ask you directly. Whenever you get a chance, please let me know, or feel free to forward to someone else who can handle this. Thanks so much.

SEIU's Henry: Clinton is right on immigration

WASHINGTON—In response to remarks made this morning on immigration by former Secretary of State and Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, SEIU International President Mary Kay Henry issued the following statement:

"Hillary Clinton is right: it's time for, in her words, a 'full and equal path to citizenship' that will bring immigrants out of the shadows to become engaged participants in our communities and in our economy. Immigrant justice is a moral imperative that must be a priority for candidates in 2016, and working people will hold accountable any politicians who defend the idea of second-class status for millions of immigrants in this nation of immigrants."

SALVATION OF MANKIND BY NARCOTIC VEGETATION ERADICATION FROM THE AIR BY UNMANNED AIRCRAFT VEHICLES

Mr. President White House, Washington
Stop world Drug Inundation and Terror Conjugation .Simultaneously

Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles

Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows: 2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation by air causing its desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:

1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?

22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 7000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!
23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.
24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able Indicating Monumental achievements. 25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming

26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite
My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!
27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.
28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

There is no justification losing an Election Campaign Ignominiously instead of emerging Victorious honorably! The Democrats should have mobilized the entire US Media attacking the Republicans for an Exploitation of US Constituency to vote against their own Interests in favor of big Oil Corporations! Such incessant Transmissions would have been a very efficacious Deterrence for most Democratic families to abstain from voting against their own Interests!

Attachments:	11.3.14 FINAL Pre-Election TPs.docx

Hillary Clinton's commitment to her Party, the Democratic Party, has been on full display during the 2014 election cycle as she has traveled, stood and fought for Democrats in every region of our nation.

Secretary Clinton has traveled and campaigned in southern, western, mid-western and all regions for fellow Democrats. She stood with Democrats because she believes in her fellow Democrats and embraces the values and principles of the Democratic Party as being distinctly good for America, distinctly American.

Bottom line, Hillary Clinton is a Democrat and she has been standing with her fellow Democrats showcasing a character of commitment, loyalty and vision our nation needs for the future.

Both Secretary Clinton and her husband, President Clinton, have made the case for raising the minimum wage, giving women equal pay for equal work, growing the middle class, providing quality healthcare and education to all Americans, and ensuring that the American Dream will exist for future generations – just as it did for them.

The Clinton's have campaigned for more than 30 Democratic candidates in 25 states, attending more than 75 campaign events and logging roughly 50,000 miles.

Hillary Clinton has made 45 midterm-related political stops since September.

According to the Washington Post , here is the list of campaign stops Hillary Clinton has made this fall:

John, I finally got word on where the aforementioned comments were made. It was at a fundraiser in Denver. That is not what she should be saying anywhere, but Denver is an especially bad spot for that message due to the number of well-heeled labeling supporters there. It is clear that she does not have a consistent message so I hope you can get through to her on this with my suggestion from earlier today. Again, I am happy to brief her or anyone on the behind-the-scenes politics here.

Thanks,

This is what we found that she said most recently. Not exactly what you want her to say, but actually pretty good and not what your friend suggested. This was at a Maryland fundraiser. Is that where he was?

QUESTION: Do you think people have a right to know what's in their food and that GMO, genetically modified organisms, should be labeled?

HILLARY CLINTON: I believe in two things. I believe in what the Department of Agriculture is doing is to start with a voluntary labeling program because that's all they can get through right now. That's all they can get through, but they need to start it. And we need to tell food manufacturers, through consumer and buyer pressure, to put more information on labels. And people can do that.

But the other thing, the thing I am worried about most right now is one of these riders we were talking about, is to preempt states from imposing more rules on what information people should be able to have. So our first order is to stop that rider until we can actually try to let states do more and give states the chance to lead the way. That's what I support. Thank you all.

And separately, did you see my email to you from a couple days ago? If not, I have appended it below. With the defeat of the Dark Act in 2015, this next year is going to be THE crucible year for getting this resolved, so Hillary's support is very important and I honestly cannot imagine she wants to take a position that is the opposite of what 90% of America's mothers support. Please, lets discuss this asap.

Hi john, I hope the anecdote below from one of the nation's most successful and awarded advertising execs is not accurate, but if so, it is very disappointing. We just won a staggering victory in keeping the "Dark Act" out of the Omnibus and Tom Vilsack, Debbie Stabenow and I are organizing a meeting with large food companies in January to try to hammer out a final mandatory labeling solution. Hillary's publicly opposing this is both the wrong policy position but also a direct breach of what she told me, namely that she supports average citizens and moms having the right to know. I have raised nearly $400K for her because I believed what she told me. If that is not the case, I'd like the chance to speak to her.

Thanks, Gary

Saw HRC hitting it hard yesterday.

Seems like an important opportunity to drive an implicit contrast in the debate, so might make sense to keep at it. Not really seeing it break through in a big way online yet, but the potential is there.

Sanders said, in part, we should reduce violence in media/video games. Might be true but plenty of countries have violence in media. We are the only country with swiss-cheese gun law/tons of mass shootings.

RE: State of the Race

This year, we set out to re-elect Brad with advantages that we didn't have in 2012. Together, we have built a strong grassroots voter contact operation, swept virtually all the major endorsements early, and posted record-breaking fundraising totals, putting us at a financial advantage over our opponent for the first time ever.

I couldn't be more proud of the campaign we built together.

And as we look ahead, we hold one major advantage that is more important than any horserace data can measure: Brad's priorities align with the district.

TV Ads

Last week, we launched our first TV ad , which boldly emphasizes Brad's values as a proud Democrat, including standing up for middle class families, protecting a woman's right to choose and promoting marriage equality. In contrast, Bob Dold's ad doesn't even mention his party or his reliable Republican voting record. The press has taken note of this dichotomy. The Chicago Sun-Times reported, "Schneider is embracing his being a Democrat and Dold is running from his identity as a Republican."

A voting record clearly aligned with voter's beliefs is something money can't buy. In our Democratic leaning district, our campaign will make sure that voters know that when Bob Dold had his chance, he was a reliable Republican vote on virtually every key issue. He voted for the Ryan Budget (twice!), voted to defund Planned Parenthood, voted 28 times to repeal or dismantle Obamacare, and even voted more than 200 times to weaken environmental protections. This is a powerful message that we know works.

Fundraising Advantage

We were able hit the airwaves early with our first ad because of the more than 19,000 grassroots donors that have given to our campaign. In July, we announced that we raised more than $800,000 -- outraising Bob Dold for the fifth reporting period in a row. This was a huge turnaround from 2012 when Brad was outspent by $2 million dollars and still won. More important than how much we raised is how we raised it -- 80 percent of our contributions have come from donors giving less than $100, and this year, more than 40 percent of contributions came from donors giving to our campaign for the first-time ever.

Right-Wing Groups Spending Big

From the beginning of this race, we expected an onslaught of spending from right-wing organizations and, sure enough these groups are now spending big. In just the past two weeks, outside ads have come flooding in from Karl Rove's Crossroads GPS, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and more. The Rove ad missed the mark so badly that Lynn Sweet of the Chicago Sun-Times immediately declared that it had backfire potential. People in our district spoke out against Rove's ad and the Lake County News Sun 's Editorial Board published an op-ed stating that Bob Dold "appears to be in mind-meld with the 'Just Say No to Everything' battalions in the House" and noted that the ad "attempts to damage Schneider but mostly reinforces Dold's record."

Continuing the trend of getting it wrong, a recent radio attack ad from the right-wing group New Prosperity Foundation was so blatantly false that the radio stations took it off the air.

Republicans in Congress have one of the most toxic brands in American politics today. Nothing else comes close.

Still, we expect to see even more ads from outside groups attacking Brad, and we will continue to ask you to help us level the playing field. We may not match the opposition dollar-for-dollar on the airwaves, but we can make sure our message is heard -- and because the voters' values fundamentally align with Brad's, our message will be more powerful. Sign your name to fight back against the influence of Citizens United.

Ground Game

This year alone, our supporters have made more than 213,000 phone calls on behalf of our campaign, and together we've knocked on over 55,000 doors across the district. This is one of our greatest achievements. With only 60 days to go, we are continuing to build on the organization we built in 2012 and hone our strategy on the ground. We have a lot of work left to do to build our grassroots ground game, and we need your help to get over the finish line.

On Election Night in 2012 while votes were being tallied, our campaign was down consistently until the very last early ballots were counted. Ultimately, we won by just over 3,300 votes. It was the hard work of our volunteers that led us to our big win on Election Night, and we know that you will make the difference again.

Delivering a victory on November 4th is going to take a lot of work, but with your help, Team Brad has proven time and time again that we're up to the task. Thank you for being part of this team.

All the best,

John,

Sorry this is late coming as previously promised. We are in a full court press with our affiliates regarding the Hillary recommendation. I have spent the last two afternoons and evenings on one-on-one calls with our 52 state executive directors and Lily has called all state presidents and is skyping into state affiliate leadership meetings. We are getting hard counts of the NEA PAC (state presidents) and the 6 members of our Executive Committee are calling our 180+ NEA Board members.

I am traveling to Wisconsin board meeting this weekend, then New Jersey and Pennsylvania boards next weekend. Our VP is headed to Maryland board.

We have solid support in many of our states but we have some big ones outstanding.

California, our largest affiliate, is still a wild card.

Lily is barnstorming the south on a back to school tour, talking with state presidents and other leaders and skyping into other states while on the road.

Truth be told we are encountering timidity around going 'early' which we are confronting head on.

Multiple issues being raised with which you are familiar.

We may need help in a few places. We will know better after this weekend.

Here's the draft of the memo for feedback, both attached and below.

Earned Media/Next Steps
January 2015

Objective: As media attention increasingly turns to 2016 and Secretary Clinton continues to move towards a decision, we want to be proactive in shaping a public narrative that does three things:

1) Explains on our own terms who she's meeting and talking with, both in terms of potential campaign hires and policy advisors. She's casting a wide net, looking for the best talent, and listening to people with bold ideas from across the party. Notably, she is specifically reaching out to progressive policy experts and to people in the Obama orbit, demonstrating that she is doing things differently this time. She will be positioned to run a thoughtful, successful, forward-looking and technological advanced campaign, should she decide to run.

2) Provides cover and context for recruiting the best people and appealing to those who are looking for signals about whether this is something that they want to be a part of.

3) Begins to build energy and enthusiasm among Democrats for a forward-looking potential candidacy that will offer a bold vision for the future.

Placing a Story

As discussed on our call, we are all in agreement that the time is right place a story with a friendly journalist in the coming days that positions us a little more transparently while achieving the above goals.

Who:

For something like this, especially in the absence of us teasing things out to others, we feel that it's important to go with what is safe and what has worked in the past, and to a publication that will reach industry people for recruitment purposes.

We have has a very good relationship with Maggie Haberman of Politico over the last year. We have had her tee up stories for us before and have never been disappointed. While we should have a larger conversation in the near future about a broader strategy for reengaging the beat press that covers HRC, for this we think we can achieve our objective and do the most shaping by going to Maggie.

What:

Mechanically, the story will have three basic components. First, a list of names that we agree upon beforehand that we will give to a reporter on background, both policy people and campaign people. Second, some information provided on background that explains what is happening and why and third, a quote on-the-record that affirms all of this in an official capacity, making clear that this is a sanctioned story.

1) Names:

a. Policy*

i. Joe Stiglitz

ii. Paul Volcker

* More names available if and when it's helpful. And we should revisit if and how to give people a heads up beforehand.

b. Campaign

i. John, Joel, and Robby are already out there

ii. Teddy Goff?

iii. Wendy Clark?

2) On Background as someone familiar with HRC's thinking:

After the midterms, HRC turned in earnest to thinking through a decision, as she always said she would. She's taking on the two big questions she posed at the end of her book: "What's your vision for America?" and "Can you lead us there?" During the midterm campaign, you heard her lay out a lot of the challenges we face, particularly stagnant incomes and the middle class squeeze that is preventing a lot of Americans from feeling the recovery. So now she's focusing on potential solutions. She's casting a wide net, with a particular emphasis on new voices and new ideas. Talking to Joe Stiglitz about inequality. Talking to Paul Volker about financial reform. When you include outreach by her team, there have been discussions with more than 100 policy experts across the country. As for the second question -- can you lead us there? -- she's also talking to people about what a successful, forward-looking and technological advanced campaign would look like, one that would allow her to have a conversation with the American public about these ideas and do so in innovative ways. And just like on the policy side, she's especially interested in new voices and new talent. It's no accident she's talking to so many people from the Obama orbit. Joel Benenson, for example. If she runs, this is going to be a different kind of campaign, from top to bottom.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

3) On the record:

She is thinking through a decision and doing so with a big-tent approach that allows her to hear from lots of people across the Democratic party. She wants to hear new voices and new ideas. She's using this time to look at bold new ideas for helping the middle class and what it would take to build an inclusive, thoughtful and technically advanced campaign, so that if she decides to run, she'll be ready.

When:

Next week probably makes the most sense, but after we have an agreed-upon plan in place we should reconvene early next week by email or phone and make a decision.

Subject: Re: Follow-up Media Call

Robby, I agree with you about the next discussion needing to be about specific implementation. Towards that end, Nick will reply all with the memo he drafted – which has languished with me, not him. I can do anytime tonight, but a 10pm call two years before Iowa seems a bit much — especially since there won't be anyone left to call us tomorrow, they all hit in one fell swoop this afternoon. So my suggestion is that everyone absorbs Nick's draft overnight, and Marissa Astor sets up a call tomorrow for tomorrow on the early side with the benefit of reading all these stories. Again though, I'm free at 10pm if the group thinks we shouldn't wait. Huma & Robby, entirely up to you.

Since I procrastinated though, I'll just add here what I was going to incorporate: Yes HRC learned from 2008, as she has learned from every experience of her life. But we shouldn't let people forget that 2007 was eight years ago. She has had many experiences since and they have been part of the learning/ growing process. So the question of what she will do in 2016 isn't without a basis to answer as if she's been in a coma since she last ran. Look at what she did for President Obama in the general. Look at how she handled his wanting her to join the cabinet. Look at how she did the job of Secretary of State. Look at what she has done since, particularly on the philanthropic front. She has made hundreds of policy, management and personnel decisions over that span, and by and large they've turned out pretty well.

If you want to know what someone is going to do, a good place to start is what they've done. In 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, and 2014.

I would strongly prefer to react to something because we discussed strategy on our last call and at this point I would like to discuss implementation. There was agreement that we should shape likely leaks in the best light for HRC and supplement with bits of policy that show her focused on helping the MC. I'd like to just move forward in that strategy. Is there a draft of the memo we can see?

The Supreme Court Institute (SCI) has posted the schedule of moot courts in cases calendared for argument in the U.S. Supreme Court during the April sitting of the current Supreme Court Term, October Term (OT) 2015.
PLEASE NOTE: April is the FINAL argument sitting of the current Supreme Court Term, so this is your LAST CHANCE to observe an SCI moot court until next Term, OT 2016!

To view the March sitting moot court schedule, follow 3 simple steps:

1. Click the link below:
   http://www.law.georgetown.edu/academics/centers-institutes/supreme-court-institute/moot-court-program/index.cfm
2. Click on the "Moot Court Schedule" tab.
3. Log in with your GULC net-ID and password.

Attendance at SCI moot courts is by invitation only. To request an invitation to attend a moot court, please follow the instructions at the top of the "Moot Court Schedule" page.

Invitations to SCI moot courts are usually sent one to two weeks before the moot will be held. When you receive an invitation, just follow the instructions (i.e., review the list of opposing counsel, parties, and amici curiae to see whether you have any personal, professional, or financial connection that could pose a conflict of interest; if you're conflict-free, respond to the invitation stating that you have no conflicts and agree to maintain the strict confidentiality of the moot court). Once we receive your response, we'll put you on the list of approved observers; you must respond to the invitation in order to attend.
We start moot courts promptly once counsel and all panelists have arrived. To preserve confidentiality and decorum, no observers are allowed to enter once the moot has begun, so please arrive at least 5-10 minutes before the scheduled start-time so we can check you in.

Please note: In the past, we have received messages from students and faculty who have had problems logging into the secure portal on the SCI web-page to gain access to the moot court schedule. We have been advised by IST that those who are experiencing this problem must clear their cache AND browser cookies; detailed instructions for this process are available at: http://www.refreshyourcache.com/en/home/ .
Please contact the IT Helpdesk at 662-9562 (not the Supreme Court Institute) if you continue to experience problems gaining access to the moot court schedule.

Ted Strickland for SENATE

According to a recent PPP poll, a strong majority of voters in Ohio think that a new justice should be named to the Supreme Court this year.

And it's not just Democrats who agree. Ohio Republicans, Democrats, and independents alike believe that the Senate should at least give President Obama's selection a chance before deciding whether or not to confirm them.

Here's the takeaway from Public Policy Polling:

> "The outlook ... is pretty clear- voters want a replacement for Justice Scalia to be named this year, and they especially overwhelmingly want Republicans in the Senate to give President Obama's selection a chance."

The results of this poll are indeed clear: Rob Portman's extreme position of vowing to spend the next year blocking President Obama's Supreme Court nominee is NOT sitting well with Ohio voters.

As a Ted Strickland for Senate supporter, we have some additional polling questions around the Supreme Court debate and the Senate race in Ohio that we'd like you to answer.

Boehner Admits That He's Now Heard From Supporters Of The Public Option

http://thinkprogress.org/2009/10/16/boehner-garlic-publicoption/

Earlier this month, House Republican Leader Rep. John Boehner (R-OH) explained his strident opposition to a public health insurance option by claiming he had never met an American in support of it. "I'm still trying to find the first American to talk to who is in favor of the public option," Boehner said. "This is about as unpopular as a garlic milkshake ."

Of course, the public option is supported by a majority of the nation, but also by a majority of people in Boehner's home state of Ohio. Boehner's comments elicitedridicule , as well as visits to his office by many supporters of the public option. The SEIU has a video of one such visit:

Re Reilly. Talked to him. Given the structure of his company unlikely we would make him primary pollster, but we should keep him in our thinking. I'm going to try to sit down with him in the next two weeks.

BOXER CALLS ON SPEAKER BOEHNER TO DISBAND "SHAM" BENGHAZI SELECT COMMITTEE

Senator Calls Committee an "Abuse of Taxpayer Funds," Citing Majority Leader McCarthy's Statement Boasting About the Committee Bringing Down "Unbeatable" Hillary Clinton's Poll Numbers

Washington, D.C. - Today, U.S. Senator Barbara Boxer (D-CA), the longest serving current member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called on House Speaker John Boehner (R-OH) to disband the House Select Committee on Benghazi after the stunning interview with House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-CA) in which he boasted that the Select Committee brought down "unbeatable" Hillary Clinton's poll numbers.

Senator Boxer called Boehner's attention to the quote by McCarthy last night:

"Everybody thought Hillary Clinton was unbeatable, right? But we put together a Benghazi special committee, a select committee. What are her numbers today? Her numbers are dropping."

Boxer asked Boehner to disband the Committee, which she called "a political smear campaign" and "an abuse of taxpayer funds."

The full text of the Senator's letter follows:

September 30, 2015

The Honorable John Boehner
Speaker
United States House of Representatives
H-232 The Capitol
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

I know that you have taken your oath of office seriously in your more than two decades serving in the House of Representatives.

When we raise our right hand and are sworn into office, we pledge to support and defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic - not to use our official positions to bring down a political opponent.

Now we know from an interview with Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy that the Benghazi Select Committee had everything to do with bringing down Hillary Clinton's poll numbers. Here is the quote from Mr. McCarthy:

"Everybody thought Hillary Clinton was unbeatable, right? But we put together a Benghazi special committee, a select committee. What are her numbers today? Her numbers are dropping."

Every American should be outraged by this politically motivated sham. It is time to disband this committee, which is clearly not focused on a tragedy but on a political smear campaign. I believe the Committee is an abuse of taxpayer funds.

I look forward to your response to this important request.

Sincerely,

Barbara Boxer
United States Senator

John,
I got a call from Sim Farar the other day.
He said he was calling me to ask you whether you would meet in person with Boxer when you're in DC sometime soon. Not urgent, but next few weeks.

This is a little peculiar. I've been doing Barbara's stuff for years, we're close, she calls me whenever she has something on her mind, so why she talked to Sim about talking to me about talking to you is a little bizarre. Maybe they were having a conversation about something else and this came up and he said he'd make the call.

Anyway, we need Babs. Sim is a big HRC fundraiser. I would encourage you to do the sit down.

How would you like to handle?

Milia, hooking you in here and my assistant Ellen.

“Joe Biden is a good man and a great Vice President. Serving alongside him in the Senate and then the administration, I saw first-hand his passion for our country and our people. Like millions of others, I admire his devotion to family, his grace in grief, his grit and determination on behalf of the middle class, and his unyielding faith in America’s promise. As Vice President, Joe has been by President Obama’s side for every pivotal decision. He helped save the auto industry and pull our economy back from the brink of depression. Subject:	[big campaign] McCain "Forgotten Places" Tour: Message and Research attached
Attachments:	McCain Poverty Edited.doc

John McCain is visiting Youngstown, Ohio today as part of his "forgotten places" tour, but McCain's economic plan leaves behind those people in the "forgotten places" of the country. John McCain's plan, like Bush's, gives break after break to millionaires and wealthy corporations, but does little for working and middle class families.

McCain, the eighth wealthiest Senator, is OUT OF TOUCH with the struggles facing families and communities like Youngstown. Ohio has lost about 257,000 manufacturing jobs since 2000 and Youngstown has been hard-hit by NAFTA, yet McCain adviser Carly Fiorina says NAFTA has been a "benefit to the nation " and McCain has told Ohioans "some of those manufacturing jobs are not coming back."

- While McCain's estimated wealth increased from $10 million to up to $100 million during the Bush years, the median American family income has declined $500 after inflation since 2000. [New York Times , 4/9/08]

McCain will continue Bush's anti-worker policies. McCain's economic policies, like Bush's, are great for wealthy corporations, but leave workers out in the cold.

- Like Bush, McCain is a strong supporter of free trade deals like NAFTA that have devastated communities.
- Carly Fiorina, the "public face" of McCain's economic team is a promoter of outsourcing.
- McCain has voted against the Employee Free Choice Act and raising the minimum wage.

Subject: [big campaign] Vets for Freedom Offering Cash For Frats To Protest VP Debate

Vets for Freedom is apparently a little short on support in St. Louis... (highly recommend reading the email sent to frats, it's hilarious)

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/10/01/pro-war-group-offering-ca_n_130827.html

Pro-War Group Offering Cash For Frats To Demonstrate At VP Debate

In hopes of organizing a robust demonstration for the vice presidential debate this Thursday in St. Louis, the pro-Iraq War (and ostensibly pro-McCain) organization, Vets for Freedom, is resorting to offering local college fraternities hundreds of dollars if their members come and hold signs.

In an email obtained by the Huffington Post, Vets for Freedom field staffer Laura Meyer offered a fraternity at the University of St. Louis a "sizable donation" - plus free lunch - if it could use their pledges to demonstrate outside the VP debate.

"I was emailing you today," wrote Meyer, "because I am trying to find people who would be willing to hold up signs for a few hours in the afternoon this Thursday outside the VP debate site. It's only for a few hours and you can gain a lot from it.... first off, lunch for any guys who agree to volunteer will be on me. Secondly, they will get lots of media attention! My organization did a similar thing in Mississippi last week and a ton of them were on TV. Meaning, the guys could wear their [REDACTED] gear while holding up our signs and get attention for their frat. Also, they will get to hang out with a bunch of really cool Iraq and Afghanistan war veterans.

"Lastly, and here's the kicker.... if you guys can get us at least 20 volunteers for those few hours, my organization will make a sizable donation to your fraternity. If you use pledges you could look at it as 'free money and free publicity'. If this sounds like something you may be willing to help us out with, please let me know ASAP!"

Reached by phone, Meyer said the total amount of cash the frat could earn was between $200 and $250 for organizing 20-plus members. She also noted that the program was a success in generating publicity during last Friday's presidential debate.

Judy Mayka, a spokesperson for the national chapter, said that the practice of paying for demonstrators had been going on without their knowledge and would subsequently end.

"Obviously this was not a direction from national and we have contact the Missouri staffers and volunteers and told them it is not appropriate in our policy," she said. "And those who choose to attend the vice presidential debate should not be compensated."

As for the payments made for volunteers during the Mississippi presidential debate, Mayka added: "We will be looking into that."

The practice of paying volunteers is perfectly legal, and having scores of rowdy pro-war supporters cheering on the backdrop of TV sets can be an effective way for Vets for Freedom to disseminate its message.

But keep in mind, some of the people demonstrating outside the VP debate had a choice to make: take the money from Vets for Freedom or subject themselves to a night of hazing and binge drinking. On Thursday, we will see how many chose the former.

Subject:	Re: It is official

So, that really happened, friend.

After officially nominating Ken Cuccinelli as their candidate for Governor this weekend, Republicans selected his ideological twins — E. W. Jackson and Mark Obenshain — to round out their ticket.

Apparently, having Ken Cuccinelli as their party's standard bearer wasn't enough for Virginia Republicans. They doubled (or tripled) down on their extreme vision for Virginia.

If we don't fight back today, we could be left with a government in Richmond that is more concerned about limiting access to women's health care or rolling back gay rights than creating jobs.

Will you donate $5 and help make sure that doesn't happen?

Cuccinelli, Jackson, and Obenshain are three peas in a pod. They've made divisive social rhetoric a cornerstone of their careers.

In past emails, I've highlighted some of Cuccinelli's more extreme rhetoric, but I wanted to share some of Jackson & Obenshain's:

- Jackson said, "[Homosexual's] minds are perverted, they're frankly very sick people psychologically, mentally and emotionally."
- Jackson also said, "I wholeheartedly support the comparison of abortion with slavery."
- In addition to cosponsoring Cuccinelli's bill that tried to ban common forms of birth control like the pill, Obenshain sponsored a bill that would force women to report miscarriages to the police within 24 hours.

As Terry said on Saturday, we need all Virginians to learn what will happen if Cuccinelli and his running mates are elected. Once they do, we know they'll understand the importance of this election. But we need your help to get out our message.

If you don't want to live in a state represented by Cuccinelli, Jackson, or Obenshain please donate $$5 right now and support our campaign.

Thanks for supporting Terry and his vision for Virginia, economy.

Ken Cuccinelli's been clear about his vision for Virginia — he wants to roll back gay rights, limit women's access to health care, and spend your tax dollars trying to delegitimize climate science.

Republicans at the convention weren't just okay with that extreme vision — they rallied behind it. And Cuccinelli's deep-pocketed allies are pouring money into his campaign to make it a reality.

I know that when people learn what living in Cuccinelli's Virginia would really be like, they'll understand the importance of this election. But I need your help to get that message out.

If you can't imagine living in Cuccinelli's Virginia, donate $5 right now to support my campaign.

My thinking on this was because the ballot questions at the end of the survey are of less use to us already since the Democratic primary will continue to be in flux. It is already a false read. The termination question is a concern but we need some cost-savings.

Hi Milia,

Wang Zhenmin is dean of Tsinghua Law School. He is being brought around to "explain" recent Chinese legislation and "reassure" key thought-leaders in the US. He visited CAP yesterday and heard our honest opinions on China's draft Foreign NGO Law.

The attached memo (drafted for something else) shares updates on the law and our engagement.

Thanks,

Subject: The most important abortion ruling in a generation (add your name)

Join us.

Today the Supreme Court heard arguments in Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt, a case that could walk back all the progress we've made in securing reproductive rights for women.

Add your name if you're ready to elect Democrats in November who will fight for a woman's right to choose.

ADD MY NAME

John --

Forty-three years ago, the Supreme Court affirmed that women in this country have the constitutional right to make our own reproductive health decisions. Today, the Supreme Court heard arguments in Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt, a case involving abortion restrictions in Texas that would force the majority of abortion clinics in the state to shut down.

This has the potential to be the most important abortion ruling in a generation. If the Court rules against us -- or splits 4-4 on this decision -- the state's restrictions will be upheld, not only denying many Texas women access to legal abortion services in their own state, but also cementing restrictions in other states within the Fifth Circuit and opening the door for new Texas-like restrictions in other states.

It's a tough pill to swallow that despite how far women have come on so many fronts over the last four decades, our access to reproductive health care in this country still largely depends on where we live or what we can afford.

Since 1973, the campaign to undo the progress we made in Roe v. Wade has been unrelenting. This past year alone, my Republican colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives voted seven times to defund Planned Parenthood, threatening to deny millions of women access to safe, reliable, and affordable care. And as we saw all too viscerally in the horrific armed attack on a Planned Parenthood clinic in Colorado Springs in November, physical and psychological assaults on providers are creating a climate of fear and hostility, attempting to deter women from getting the care to which they are entitled.

In the past five years, states have passed more than 280 abortion restrictions, forcing closures of clinics and creating real barriers to women's ability to access safe and affordable reproductive health care. Shutting down or cutting funding for places like Planned Parenthood will only increase the number of unplanned pregnancies and the need for abortions -- whether they're legal or not.

The reproductive rights of women in America are at risk. Plain and simple. And John, we are one election away from turning back the clock even further.

It's up to us to fight as hard as we ever have to elect leaders who understand what's at stake. Add your name if you're ready to do the work it takes to stand against Republican extremism in 2016:

http://my.democrats.org/Let-Her-Choose

When I think about the world I want our daughters to live in, it's one where their rights are inviolable and their independence is valued. It's a moral outrage when legislatures full of male politicians interfere in women's health care decisions. Today the Court will weigh in on whether we will continue down this dangerous road, but it's up to us in November to make sure we don't allow women's reproductive freedom to be threatened any further.

Subject: Let's give Illinois a raise

Friend,

This week was an eye-opening experience for me.

When I decided to accept the minimum wage challenge, I didn't do it as a gimmick -- I did it to raise awareness and build support for raising the wage.

I knew it'd be tough -- but actually having to get by on just $79 for a week really put things in perspective. It also made me more committed than ever to raising the minimum wage here in Illinois.

Elections aren't about politicians calling each other names.

Elections are about what we can do as a society to help our neighbors, and make our state stronger. This November, voters in Illinois will have the chance to do just that.

The minimum wage referendum on the ballot this year is a way for people to make their voices heard and tell lawmakers in Springfield that workers deserve a decent, livable wage.

We're all in this together.

Let's give Illinois a raise.

Dear Neighbor,

Right now, ProgressNow Colorado's sister organization, One Wisconsin Now , is in the middle of the fight to hold that state's right-wing Governor Scott Walker accountable. Today, tens of thousands of workers, students, religious groups, and concerned citizens are turning out once again in Madison to protest Walker's attack on teachers, nurses, social workers, and other public employees. The standoff in Wisconsin has focused the attention of the entire nation on the consequences of right-wing fiscal irresponsibility.

Tomorrow, Colorado stands with them. Will you join us?

What: Stand in Support of Wisconsin
Where: Colorado State Capitol, Denver
When: Tuesday, February 22, 2011 12:00PM

Here in Colorado, we are fortunate to have largely avoided the extremist takeover of state government that's provoking the crisis in Wisconsin. Gov. Walker of Wisconsin is manipulating his state's budget to attack his own workers; we're gratfeul that Colorado made better choices, and that's not what is happening here. But our state still faces a daunting budget shortfall for the coming year, and our own teachers, nurses, and working families across our state are going to suffer. What Colorado needs right now is a plan for the voters to end our state's chronic inability to pay for basic and essential functions--once and for all.

That's our message to Colorado lawmakers, and to our friends in Wisconsin. Join us tomorrow at the Colorado State Capitol, and let's make sure everyone hears it.

Sincerely,

Alan Franklin

I would greatly appreciate it if you could put a good word in for Lizzie. Attached are her cover letter, resume, and writing sample. She is a sociology major at Connecticut College in New London (my hometown) with a 3.08 average and strong writing skills. As part of her Sociology major she has taken several courses on race relations, which is a special interest of hers as an Asian American adoptee from South Korea. In addition, she also studied immigration issues as part of her Danish Politics course during her semester abroad in Copenhagen. She has also focused on global women's empowerment, child exploitation, education and special needs children issues through internships with Child Plan, a global non-profit focused on young women and children, For Love of Children (FLOC) a DC based tutoring program and an Arlington County School Summer Life Skills Program for special needs children. Lizzie is very committed to making a contribution on important public policy issues like race relations, immigration, human trafficking and child exploitation. She is a hard worker, capable of juggling many tasks and would be honored to have the opportunity to work at CAP.

September 25, 2015

Dear Friends,

This Tuesday, on the eve of the autumnal equinox, Pope Francis flew north to Washington from Santiago de Cuba to meet President Obama. The meeting joined the moral authority of the Pontiff and the political authority of the President to accelerate the embargo's ongoing fall from grace.

Aboard his plane from Cuba to the United States, Pope Francis told reporters that the Vatican's long-standing opposition to embargoes was founded on the social doctrine of the Church, which he called "precise and just."

In Cuba, he urged Presidents Castro and Obama to persevere on the path toward normalization and held out their diplomacy "as an example of reconciliation for the entire world."

At the White House, he repeated this thought, saying, "The efforts which were recently made to mend broken relationships and to open new doors to cooperation within our human family represent positive steps along the path of reconciliation, justice, and freedom."

And again in his address to the U.S. Congress: "I would like to recognize the efforts made in recent months to help overcome historic differences linked to painful episodes of the past," the pope said. "This has required, and requires, courage and daring."

The decision by Pope Francis to bring together the themes of leadership and the Church's opposition to trade sanctions in his trips to Cuba and the United States is significant.

It only highlights what President Obama has done to focus attention and national debate on how U.S. interests in Cuba and Latin America would best be served by ending the embargo.

He began the drumbeat on December 17th, the day he announced the diplomatic breakthrough with Cuba, saying "I look forward to engaging Congress in an honest and serious debate about lifting the embargo."

He repeated his call one month later in his State of the Union Address, saying "Our shift in Cuba policy has the potential to end a legacy of mistrust in our hemisphere; removes a phony excuse for restrictions in Cuba; stands up for democratic values; and extends the hand of friendship to the Cuban people. And this year, Congress should begin the work of ending the embargo."

Secretary of State John Kerry repeated the message at the State Department on July 20th, during a joint press availability with Cuba's Foreign Minister Bruno Rodriguez, and said the momentum he expected joint negotiations to generate as bilateral problems were resolved would help Cuba and the United States "make the most out of this moment [and] not lose the future with respect to the embargo."

In Havana, after he spoke at the raising of the American Flag at the U.S. Embassy in August, Secretary Kerry returned to the subject of the embargo talking to reporters with Minister Rodríguez, again saying publicly that the President advocates for and supports lifting the embargo, adding, significantly (remember he is speaking in Cuba), "the embargo is a sort of two-way street. It requires both of us to do things."

Even this week, from the State Department podium, spokesman John Kirby gave the drumbeat a fresh rhythm when he suggested the U.S. might abstain when the U.N. votes on Cuba's resolution condemning the embargo as a way of taking a position "that you want the law changed."

The president, the Secretary, and perhaps even the pope know that the U.S. Congress, as it is currently constituted, will not repeal the embargo against Cuba. That will take an election.

Secretary Kerry was not lining up with the hardliners in Cuba when he pointedly stated that both countries will have to work to get the embargo lifted. It's a two-way street. No one is off the hook.

The administration is not naïve. The effort to overturn this faulty policy needs to build over time. They are wise to seize the opportunity presented by the pope's visit - and the controversy that could arise if it abstained on the U.N. vote - as teachable moments for the American public.

We are seeing not just a shift in the conversation, but a shift in power. Hardliners aren't dominating the discussion anymore. It's isn't loopy to talk about ending the embargo against Cuba when the pope and the president join in common cause in an effort to make it so. It's common sense.

U.S.-CUBA RELATIONS

Pope Francis Leaves Cuba and Comes to America

Following his trip to Cuba, Pope Francis was welcomed at the White House this week, where he was commended by President Obama for his "invaluable support of our new beginning with the Cuban people," and then became the first pope in history to address a joint meeting of the U.S. Congress.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

During wide-ranging remarks Thursday in the House Chamber, the Pope acknowledged the leadership of President Obama for his opening of Cuba when he said:

> "I would like to recognize the efforts made in recent months to help overcome historic differences linked to painful episodes of the past... When countries which have been at odds resume the path of dialogue - a dialogue which may have been interrupted for the most legitimate of reasons - new opportunities open up for all. This has required, and requires, courage and daring, which is not the same as irresponsibility. A good political leader is one who, with the interests of all in mind, seizes the moment in a spirit of openness and pragmatism. A good political leader always opts to initiate processes rather than possessing spaces."

Francis, the first pope from the Americas, is the third pope to visit Cuba, and the fourth pope to have come to the United States.

According to Thomas Wenksi, Archbishop of Miami, the trip "has served as a bridge between the United States and Cuba and that the pope would use his experience during his trip to Cuba to inform his visit to the United States," writes the Miami Herald .

Pope Francis departed Washington D.C. on Thursday and continued his U.S. tour in New York, where he addressed the opening session of the United Nations General Assembly.

In his address to the UN General Assembly, Pope Francis praised the "political, juridical and technical advances" of the UN as "...a path towards attaining the ideal of human fraternity." Pope Francis did not specifically address the U.S. embargo against Cuba. He spoke at length about the environment and equality saying, "Economic and social exclusion is a complete denial of human fraternity and a grave offense against human rights and the environment." The pope concluded his remarks with the reminder that, "The future demands of us critical and global decisions in the face of world-wide conflicts which increase the number of the excluded and those in need."

The pope left New York to visit Philadelphia, where he will lead the World Meeting of Families before departing for Rome.

United Nations vote may signal change in U.S. policy

Monday, the Associated Press reported that the U.S. may abstain from voting against a resolution condemning the U.S. embargo against Cuba at the U.N. General Assembly. To abstain from the vote would lend symbolic emphasis to the administration's stated position that the embargo should be lifted.

Reuters reports the General Assembly's vote on the embargo resolution will take place on October 27.

Cuba has presented resolutions condemning the U.S. for its embargo before the UN for 23 years. Last year, the General Assembly voted overwhelmingly in support of ending the embargo with 188 countries voting in favor. Only the U.S. and Israel voted against the resolution. Assembly resolutions require only a majority of votes to pass but are unenforceable according to U.S. News and World Report .

The Obama administration has not decided how it will vote, according to administration officials. The prospect that the administration might not cast its lonely vote against a nearly unanimous position of the world body condemning the embargo has already irked some in Congress who oppose the President's new policy toward Cuba.

Congressman Jeff Duncan, (SC-3), Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Relations, wrote UN Ambassador Samantha Power urging the administration to vote as it has in support of the embargo for the last two decades.

"The idea that the Administration would consider not supporting U.S. law in a multilateral body like the United Nations is stunning and dangerous to the foundation for the rule of law and democratic institutions in our country. Such an action would also undermine our foreign policy efforts to promote the rule of law, democracy, and freedom for repressed peoples around the world."

Senator Marco Rubio (FL) and Rep. Mario Diaz-Balart (FL-25) also issued statements opposing such an action. "To support a resolution in the U.N. aimed at criticizing U.S. law would not only appease the (Castro) regime, but would ignore sanctions passed by Congress and signed into law by President Clinton," Diaz-Balart said.

"Obviously, we have to obey the law," State Department spokesman John Kirby told reporters Monday, "[but] it doesn't mean you can't take a position that you want the law changed."

President Obama and President Castro will separately address the UN General Assembly on September 28. This will be President Castro's first trip to the U.S. since the Cuban revolution.

As U.S. and Cuba move toward civil aviation agreement, Priceline mulls expansion into Cuban market

U.S. negotiators will travel to Havana for talks with Cuban counterparts on September 28-29 to discuss key issues in reaching an agreement on regular commercial air service, including aviation safety and security, as well as code sharing between Cuban state-owned carrier Cubana de Aviación and carriers from the U.S., Reuters reported .

The U.S. delegation will be led by Assistant Secretary of State for Economic and Business Affairs Charles H. Rivkin, the State Department announced Tuesday.

Regularly scheduled commercial air service between Cuba and the U.S. has been suspended since the early 1960s. "Currently, American air carriers, such as American Airlines, lease aircraft to U.S. based charter travel services that have U.S. government license to serve the Island," as Examiner.com explained this week.

While tourist travel to the island remains prohibited by the U.S embargo, the Obama administration has periodically taken steps since 2009 to expand the number of U.S. travelers to Cuba - offering Cuban Americans the unlimited right to visit their families, and gradually loosening restrictions on people-to-people travelers and business travel.

As the New York Times reported this week, "Regulations issued by the Department of Commerce in September allow American companies to establish offices and premises in Cuba and airline crews to stay overnight on the island. They also allow the sale of equipment related to aviation safety to Cuba."

Such steps have increased visits by U.S. travelers to Cuba, boosted revenues to the growing share of Cuba's economy comprised of private businesses and self-employed workers, and increased interest among air carriers and traveler bookers in serving Cuba's market.

In fact, the number of those Americans visiting Cuba through Sept. 2 topped 100,000, similar to the total who visited in all of last year, newly reported statistics indicate.

On Sunday, Priceline Group Inc. announced that it is exploring opening bank accounts and establishing offices in Cuba, according to Reuters .

Priceline is the world's leading online travel services company. Leslie Cafferty, Priceline Group Vice President of Global Communications told Reuters that, "We are exploring all of these new options and hope to have operations up and running soon." Priceline subsidiary, Kayak, the travel search engine site, began publishing Cuba hotel and flight listings in January 2015.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Priceline's exploration of doing business in Cuba is the latest among travel industry companies, including JetBlue , American Airlines , and Airbnb .

A civil aviation agreement between Cuba and the U.S. would be an important step forward in enabling travel between the two countries. The talks, which start Monday, reflect the negotiating framework announced by Bruno Rodríguez Parrilla, Cuba's Minister of Foreign Affairs, and U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry, at their joint press conference following the flag raising at the U.S. Embassy in Havana on August 14th.

IN CUBA

Pope Francis emphasizes reconciliation and open-mindedness in visit to Cuba

On September 19,Pope Francis flew from Rome to Havana, Cuba, the first stop on a week-long trip touring the island and three U.S. cities. This marked his third journey to the Americas and his tenth journey abroad since his election in 2013.

Pope Francis is the first Latin American pope, and is considered enormously influential in the region for his role in U.S-Cuba normalization, peace talks between Colombia and the FARC, and mediation between Chile and Bolivia over access to the sea. Gianni La Bella, an expert in Rome on Latin American Catholicism, told the New York Times , "There has never been such resonance for the papacy in Latin America...You could almost say that Francis is considered as an alternate United Nations in the region."

President Raúl Castro greeted Pope Francis at the airport, calling the pontiff's visit to Cuba a "transcendental and enriching experience for our nation." This marks a high note in the Cuban government's relationship with the Church, which has improved markedly in recent decades.

Cuba was declared an atheist state by Fidel Castro after the Cuban Revolution in 1959. In the early 1990s, Cuba's Communist Party halted its ban on religious believers joining the Communist Party. Previous papal visits to the island by John Paul II in 1998 and Benedict XVI in 2012 precipitated the reinstatement of Christmas and Easter as national holidays. Cubans are now building the first Catholic Church on the island since the revolution.

Lopez Oliva, a historian of religion at the University of Havana, explained the growing importance of the Catholic Church as "the largest non-governmental organization in Cuba." The Church provides job training and has advocated successfully for the release of political prisoners.

On the eve of Pope Francis's visit, Cuba announced that it would free 3,522 prisoners, the largest such release since 1959. As The Guardian reports, this action follows the pattern of previous papal visits: almost 300 prisoners were released prior to Pope John Paul II's visit in 1998, and a further 2,900 were released prior to the 2012 visit by Pope Benedict.

On Sunday, the 78-year old pontiff said Mass in Havana's Plaza of the Revolution. After Mass, Pope Francis had a "friendly and informal" meeting with former president Fidel Castro where they exchanged books on religion reported CNN .

Addressing political matters, Pope Francis advocated for moving U.S.-Cuba rapprochement forward, urging political leaders to "persevere on this path and to develop all its potentialities ... as an example of reconciliation for the entire world," according to Reuters. Francis called the process of normalization between Cuba and the U.S. "a sign of the victory of the culture of encounter and dialogue" adding that a "system of universal growth" had prevailed over "the forever-dead system of groups and dynasties" according to the Washington Post .

Speaking to young people in Havana, Francis urged open-mindedness and empathy in remarks that echoed the theme of reconciliation between the U.S. and Cuba:

> "Let us not close in on the culture of ideologies. When I have my ideology, my way of thinking, and you have yours, I close in on the ideology... If you think differently than I do, why shouldn't we talk? Why do we throw stones over that which separates us, that which makes us different? Why don't we shake hands over that which we have in common?"

On Monday, Francis left Havana and flew to Holguin where he celebrated Mass in Holguin's Revolution Square and acknowledged the "efforts" and "sacrifices" of those supporting the Catholic Church in Cuba. The pope encouraged listeners to challenge selfish and materialist principles in society, according to the BBC .

Next, Pope Francis traveled to Santiago de Cuba, Cuba's second largest city, where he celebrated Mass Tuesday morning at Our Lady of Charity shrine, dedicated to Cuba's revered patron saint. In Santiago de Cuba, Pope Francis called on his audience "...to live the revolution of tenderness as Mary, our Mother of Charity, did."

Francis departed Cuba on Tuesday for the United States, where he arrived at Andrews Air Force Base for his official welcome.

Dissidents detained during papal events in Cuba

Reuters reports that Cuban police authorities detained dozens of dissidents to prevent them from attending papal events throughout Cuba. Among the dissidents detained was Miriam Leiva, a journalist and founding member of the group Ladies in White.

Leiva wrote in an open letter on Wednesday that she had been detained on two separate occasions on her way to see the pope, despite her invitation to attend evening prayers with Pope Francis at the Havana cathedral from Veceslav Tumir, secretary of the Nunciatura Apostólica in Havana. Leiva claims that 150 Cubans throughout Cuba were harassed and detained during the papal visit.

Reuters adds that other dissidents were confined to their homes during the papal events. Individuals who broke through security and attempted to approach the pope were detained. The Cuban Commission of Human Rights and National Reconciliation reported 768 short-term detentions last month, the highest monthly total this year.

Pope Francis did not comment on dissident arrests while in Cuba. In an interview while flying to the United States, the pontiff said he does not know exactly what happened with the dissidents, but expressed his desire to "to meet all people."

CUBA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS

Colombia's government and FARC rebels vow to reach peace deal in six months

On Wednesday, Colombian President Juan Manuel Santos and Rodrigo Londono, the top commander of the leftist Rebels of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), shook hands in Havana in a momentous gesture of reconciliation. President Raúl Castro hosted the meeting and joined his hands with theirs. Reuters reports that Colombia's government and FARC rebels expect to reach a peace agreement within six months after three years of negotiations hosted by Cuba and co-guaranteed by Norway.

At a ceremony in Havana, President Santos announced that, "The chief of the FARC secretariat and I have agreed that in no more than six months this negotiation should come to an end and we should sign a final agreement." Conflict between the Colombian government and the FARC has continued for 51 years, making it the longest running conflict in the Western Hemisphere. The conflict has resulted in 220,000 deaths and displaced millions of individuals.

As documented by Virginia Bouvier in Colombia Calls , the announcement was stage-managed to convey the significance of the agreement reached by the two sides.

"From the Palacio de Convenciones in Havana, a special ceremony, carefully choreographed and rich in symbolism, unfolded with all the major players dressed in

"Also present were Cuban Foreign Minister Bruno Rodriguez; the representatives of the Colombian government and the FARC-EP peace delegations; and representatives of Cuba, Norway, Chile, and Venezuela, the nations that served as guarantors and accompanied the process. The moderator turned the floor to Rodolfo Benitez and Dag Nylander, guarantors from Cuba and Norway, respectively, who read the joint communiqué that the peace delegations had crafted."

Colombia's government and the FARC announced the formation of a truth commission, a deal on reparations for war victims and an amnesty agreement for combatants who did not commit war crimes. The U.S. News and World Report highlights that, according to the agreement, "Rebels that confess abuses to special peace tribunals, compensate victims and promise not to take up arms again will receive a maximum 8 years of labor under unspecified conditions but not prisons. War crimes committed by Colombia's military will also be judged by the tribunals and combatants caught lying will face penalties of up to 20 years in jail."

The Washington Office on Latin America reports that "negotiators still must define what "disarmament" means, how fighters are to be demobilized, how to turn accords into law, and how to guarantee a ceasefire while all of that happens."

Subject:	Tweet from Christina Reynolds Re: Trump's Latest Comments

All -

Flagging for all of you the following statement Clinton Campaign Deputy Communications Director Christina Reynolds tweeted tonight regarding recent comments made by Donald Trump.

Christina Reynolds @ creynoldsnc 2h 2 hours ago

Statement on @ realDonaldTrump 's latest attacks:

STATEMENT FROM CLINTON CAMPAIGN DEPUTY COMMUNICATIONS DIRECTOR CHRISTINA REYNOLDS

Though Donald Trump has pushed around nearly all of his fellow Republicans, Hillary Clinton won't be bullied. While she won't be distracted by the slings he throws at her and former President Clinton, when his insults are directed at women, immigrants, Asian-Americans, Muslims and the disabled, to name a few – Hillary Clinton will stand up to him, as she has from the beginning of his campaign. Donald Trump's words are demeaning, his policies are just as destructive. Hillary Clinton will continue to stand up to Donald Trump and all the other Republicans who will rip away the progress we've made.

The full statement from Reynolds can be read here:

"Though Donald Trump has pushed around nearly all of his fellow Republicans, Hillary Clinton won't be bullied or distracted by attacks he throws at her and former President Clinton. But when his insults are directed at women, immigrants, Asian-Americans, Muslims, the disabled, or hard working Americans looking to raise their wages – Hillary Clinton will stand up to him, as she has from the beginning. Donald Trump's words are demeaning, his policies are just as destructive. Hillary Clinton will challenge Donald Trump and all the other Republicans who will rip away the progress we've made."

Additional Talking Points Below:

- Trump's latest comments, just like most of his rhetoric on the campaign, are offensive and divisive, but they're not surprising. Given his lack of understanding or detail on key policy, his dangerous ideas on the global stage and his willingness to join the Republican field in undoing the progress made in the last eight years, it's clear that Trump's comments demeaning others are meant to distract from what he would offer America as president.
- Time and again, Trump has proven that his plan to get elected is to bully his way to the White House. That bullying has gotten him press and helped his get to the top of the polls, but it will not win the presidency. It may win him enough support to get the nomination, but it will hurt him in the general election. And refighting the 1990s
- If this is the type of candidate Republicans want as their nominee, Hillary is happy to take them on. Throughout this campaign, Hillary has proved the toughest and most effective at calling out Trump for his unacceptable rhetoric--from his dangerous anti-American policies to his plans to rip away all of the progress we've made to his offensive and bullying remarks about millions of Americans.

Hi Dennis,

Thanks very much for your help today. Needless to say, it was a really productive meeting, and Tom and I really appreciated the time and terrific ideas.

Per our chat, there are three primary follow ups:

1) Re Energy, Tom will follow up immediately with Amit Desai and you re next steps as well as coordination with CGI in June. He also has the info on Hal Harvey etc if that's helpful.

2) Re our national Kids campaign, we will follow up with you about President Clinton serving on the advisory group for this effort that we are doing with John Podesta et al. I also spoke to Chelsea about it, and she seemed very positive as well.

As we discussed, this should not require any major time commitment from President Clinton or work from the Clinton Foundation. His willingness to lend his name and occasional advice will be a big boost. Ann O'Leary (whom you know) is the lead staffer at the Center for the Next Generation, and we will be in touch shortly re follow up.

3) We are happy to discuss a potential event in SF/Bay Area in early May with President Clinton re the Clinton Foundation. Perhaps we should set a time for a follow up chat.

And finally, I'd appreciate the contact info for the folks at the Clinton Foundation who run the Haiti work. As I mentioned, my wife and daughter are interested in potentially being of assistance on the great work you folks are doing there.

Thanks again for being so helpful, and look forward to all the follow up that we outlined.

Cheers,

Jim

We had a meeting at NEA with the AV leadership, the AV development team, representatives of some of the partner organizations (i.e. Sierra, Planned Parenthood), representatives of Rob McKay and Steve Phillips and representatives of SEIU, AFSCME and NEA.

We reviewed a plan to raise $4.2M for the AV core budget (reduced substantially) in order to keep the state directors, state data and communications staff on and some basic program until November in the following states;

New Hampshire
Ohio
Michigan
Wisconsin
Colorado
New Mexico
Minnesota

I have taken on the task of trying to find the $4.2 M for the core budget by the end of the month so the AV development staff can work on trying to find donors for the state plans.

I have confirmed that Anna and Michael are committed to $1.5 M each for national AV. NEA will contribute .5M. I have asked AFSCME to contribute .5M. I still need to find another $200,000 if AFSCME comes through.

I leave for New Mexico and Colorado on Wednesday to meet with the donor collaboratives to deliver the hard news and hopefully raise some money for the state AV tables in those states.

Any help or advice you can give me would be appreciated.

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I met you at Phil Murphy's house, two weeks ago. It was a complete honor to hear your thoughts and understanding of the current political climate. Of course, I continue to follow your remarks in the media as well.

I am a director at Hackensack University Medical Center, but more importantly I am the daughter of a quadriplegic. My father got into a car accident, during Hurricane Sandy. That's what lead to his severe disability. He is a strong man and believe or not, goes to work everyday, in a wheelchair and on a ventilator. His passion and perseverance keep our entire family going. I only wish I could help him further, for his dream is to embrace my two-year old daughter. It's very difficult to see him struggle with this and although I work in the healthcare industry, I have very few methods to help him.

The reason I am writing you is because I have met Secretary Clinton, at many of her fundraisers, and have brought up the importance of pushing issues along for individuals with disabilities, however I have not been able to speak with the correct person in her administration that would deal with just that. A great example of this is, expanded use of clinical trials--there is no cure for paralysis, but there are many trials that can be expanded to help individuals, like my father.

I hope that you can point me in the right direction. Of course, I am very aware of how busy you are during this crucial time in Secretary Clinton's campaign, but I hope that you can get back to me at some point.

I wish you all the best in these very exciting times.

Warm regards and best wishes,

Mr. Podesta,

I am reaching out to you as a representative of the Hillary for America campaign to inquire whether the campaign can produce someone to present candidate Clinton's plank on Internet policy at an event this summer. We've already been in contact with candidate Cruz's and Paul's campaigns. My organization is the Internet Education Foundation and I work for Jerry Berman.

You may not remember me but today we posted a timely Throwback Thursday #TBT video that featured you (photo attached). It was a October 2, 2001 -- just 23 days before the passage of the PATRIOT Act and I hosted a debate with you , Viet Dinh (USDOJ) and James Dempsey on the legislation for our Congressional Internet Caucus. Video here .

Anyway, we're still at it and this summer we want to host a presidential candidates debate on Internet / tech policy. We basically try to do this every four years. In 2008 we hosted a debate featuring Julius Genachowski from Obama for America, Thomas Kalil for candidate Clinton, and Doug Holtz Eakin for McCain. During the last cycle we had lined up Peter Swire for Obama for America and Rep Jason Chaffetz from Romney's camp.

I've really enjoyed working with you in the past and would like to work with you to find a representative for Hillary for America for this event.

I hope we can connect on this. It will be fun.

Best, - Tim Lordan

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

REMARKS AT WHITNEY BROTHERS

KEENE, NEW HAMPSHIRE

MONDAY, APRIL 20, 2015

I'm delighted to be here at Whitney Brothers, a great family-owned and operated small business in the classic New Hampshire tradition. I just had a chance to see some of the high-quality, high-skilled work here, marrying new technology with 100 years of dedication and craftsmanship.

And of course I love that you're designing furniture specifically for the needs of our youngest children and their parents. When I had Chelsea, a crib was just a crib. But today, as I've learned since my granddaughter was born, so much more care and expertise goes into everything for our babies. So thank you for being pioneers in an area that's so important to every new family.

I wanted to come here on my first day in New Hampshire because small businesses like Whitney Brothers are the backbone of this state's economy and a key to jumpstarting growth and innovation across our country. [Small businesses employ more than half of all of New Hampshire's private sector workers – and they create two out of every three new jobs in the state.]

When I was growing up, my father ran a small business in Chicago – and I mean very small. He printed fabric for draperies and then he went out and sold them. Sometimes he could hire a few day laborers to help, sometimes my mom and my brothers and I pitched in. But mostly he was doing everything himself. He was a real waste-not want-not, pay-as-you-go, no complaining kind of guy. So I learned early on just how tough it is to make a business like this work.

I'm sure you all have your own stories and experiences about this. When I was in Iowa last week, a young man told me about what it was like trying to buy the bowling alley where he had worked as a teenager.

He had experience, talent, a college degree, and a plan to build a great business. But he also had a lot of student debt. Not because he was irresponsible and living beyond his means. Because he did was he was supposed to do. He got an education. He invested in his own future. But all the banks saw was debt. So it was a real struggle.

And that's the opposite of what we want to see in this country – which is more young people being able to start businesses, create jobs, and live their dreams.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Here in New Hampshire and across our country, Americans have come back from tough economic times. Our economy and our country are in much better shape because families did whatever it took to make it work.

Unemployment is down, and in most places homes are worth something real again. Americans are starting to think about the future again. Going back to school. Changing jobs. Starting a business. Doing the right things to get ahead.

But as that young man in Iowa experienced, all the breaks still seem to go to those already at the top. There's something wrong when it's so easy for big corporations to get a tax break but so hard for small businesses to get a loan.

America ranks 46th in the world in how hard it is to start a new business. We should be number one. It takes longer to start a business in the United State than in France.

Now, New Hampshire is one of the best places in the country to start a business. You've got fewer onerous regulations that defy commonsense, like excessive occupational licensing that keeps young people from entering new fields. And your terrific governor, Maggie Hassan, created a program to help people who lost their jobs in the recession get back on their feet and start new businesses. That's an idea we should be looking at expanding across the country.

So I want to hear directly from all of you about your own experiences and your own dreams -- about the obstacles and the successes that you've encountered and what we can do to help more small businesses thrive.

I'm running for President because you and Americans everywhere need a champion. And I want to be that champion. So you can do more than just get by -- you can get ahead and stay ahead. And starting a small business seems less like a gamble and more like an opportunity.

I'm taking on four big fights:

First, we need to build an economy for tomorrow, instead of yesterday, where being middle class means something again. And that starts right here with small businesses like Whitney Brothers, creating good jobs and helping people get ahead.

Second, we need to strengthen our families and communities, because when families are strong, America is strong.

Third, it's time to fix our broken political system. I want to get things done, so I'll work with anyone who has a good idea. But I'll also take on the powerful forces trying to take us backwards. We need to get rid of all the unaccountable money, even if it takes a constitutional amendment.

Fourth, I'll protect our country from the threats that we see, and the ones that are on the horizon.

All four of these fights will put us up against some pretty powerful opposition. But I've spent my whole life fighting for children, for families, standing up for America. And I think people know... I don't quit.

For me, this really is about doing everything I can to make sure that every child -- not just my grandchild, but every child -- has a chance to live up to his or her God-given potential. That's what I was raised to believe by my church and my family, and that's what I'll be fighting for in this campaign.

I'm going to work my heart out to earn every vote -- starting with yours.

Thank you for helping me start this campaign here in New Hampshire. Now, I'm eager to hear from you how these challenges are impacting your lives and your businesses, to share some of my ideas, to ask you some questions, and to answer some of yours.

Yes. She and HRC spoke yesterday.

I'm assuming HRC will want a longer tribute to Mikulski. They're pretty close.

The story about her staff is no doubt a problem. But if I was a reporter covering this and she in any way didn't lean right in on an issue she has been so vocal about, I would actually latch onto that. I'll defer to comms team but I think this issue has to be in the speech and she has to be as full-throated in talking about it, whether it's the first or third thing she talks about. So we're going to hit it hard anywhere it lands in the speech.

We're going to heave to deal with the facts in the story but we should just make sure that before we start diluting a strong position she has we decide whether staying strong isn't a better strategy.

Dan,

A few notes on the politics.

1. I'd connect the opening accomplishments a little more directly to Stephanie Schriock. This draft tilts a little too far to Ellen Malcolm and it's important to give Stephanie and Ellen at least equal billing. (For example, I wouldn't mention Ellen on page 8 right after you ask whether they want to see a woman president. That may be the soundbite of the day.)

2. I think you need a little more thought on the women you name. (Mikulski, Gillibrand, Warren, Boxer, Pelosi, Raimondo, Murray). Thinking about our New Hampshire politics, you ought to mention Governor Maggie Hassan -- who was the only female governor in the country til Raimondo was elected and Hassan just got reelected (also focusing on the economy). You also ought to mention Jeanne Shaheen -- who was just about the only Dem to win a tough Senate race last year (also focusing on the economy). In fact, on the Senate side, I would mention all the current female Senators -- you're only going to annoy Feinstein or Klobuchar or McCaskill et al if you pick out just a handful. You can do a list after you highlight a few.)

3. On Mikulski, instead of just noting her long ago election and the pantsuit stuff, I'd mention that she was the first woman to chair the Appropriations Committee and is now its ranking member. Maybe ditto Patty Murray as chair of the budget committee.

4. On "the year of the woman in 1992", I believe the number of women went from 2 to 5. I would note that it was great to almost triple the number of women in the senate but hard to imagine that electing a senate with 95 men and 5 women was called the year of the woman. (It's better now…but still…..)

On the economic message…

1. I'm queasy about leading with equal pay, given last week's stories about HRC staff. It also doesn't allow you to frame a broader argument about families and small businesses as the heart of our economy/future. I'd move equal pay to later in the economic section.

2. The section on workforce participation seems off to me also. Seems like our main solution is to have more women work.

3. Should we make the GOP line even edgier? Something like: "And, by the way, isn't it nice to see a few Republicans starting to dip their toes into the debate about how to create opportunities for working families? That means our arguments are resonating. So come on in, fellas, the waters fine. But you better offer something more than the same old tired trickle down economics. Families don't need any more of that.

4. Finally, I feel like we need a soundbite about women's issues are economic issues; economic issues are women's issues. Something like that. Right now, the most likely soundbite is the female president line. That's probably what the audience wants, but is that what we want? I'd love to have a strong economic soundbite too.

many thanks

Mandy

Thanks again to all for the feedback.

Have time for this but david desjardins is going to be in dc on tuesday and he wants to see if he could get 30 minutes with you.

Basically, he has decided to put approx 1M into creating a liberal think tank to study "new ideas" around the national security agenda. He has met with Borsage a couple of times but does not think his way of doing this work is on track. He believes that you are the person on the Democratic side that knows how to build a think tank and want to talk to you about it.

I can never be sure, but there may be away to take his concept and his $$ and do something in conjunction with CAP. I know he is really hard, but he does have a lot of cash.

just let me know -- he obviously would accommodate you.

Hi, John,
Thanks so much for taking the time to chat about Brian. The story's mostly set, but we're looking for one more anecdote that shows him in action on climate change. Could you think of a moment when you recall him being in the room, doing something specific on climate, as the plans were being made to pass on the reins to him? Any example you could think of would be welcome!

Heather, Elisabeth, Eryn & John,

I hope this note finds you all well. As I've only been able to catch up John & Eryn a little bit since leaving the White House, and as I'll be meeting with Heather and Elisabeth, I thought this context on Opportunity@Work might be helpful, not least to save time on my context-setting, so that we can fully focus our discussion tomorrow on the Washington Center for Equitable Growth.

On March 9th, a few days after leaving my post at the White House as Deputy Assistant to the President for Economic Policy and Director of the National Economic Council, I helped to launch a new social venture to translate policy into action called Opportunity @ Work , based at New America in Washington DC. Our overall mission is perhaps best explained in this essay, We Need to "Re-wire" the Labor Market , co-written with my co-founder Tyra Mariani, who worked with Secretary of Education Arne Duncan and Deputy Secretary Jim Shelton for four years on talent policies for teachers and principals, and on the My Brother's Keeper initiative.

Because talent is so much more widely distributed than opportunity, reforming our labor market institutions can both unlock business value and help create an economy that is more innovative, productive, dynamic and fair – an economy that works for those who work. Reforms to the way large numbers of employers hire, train, and use technology to accelerate learning and match talent to opportunity can both unlock business value and shape a better market 'demand signal' for skills, which will in turn enable more widespread innovation in accelerated job training, vocational post-secondary education, adult learning, and on-the-job training.

Opportunity@Work's first area of focus is on information technology (IT) jobs, which constitute 12% of all open jobs in the U.S. On the same day we launched Opportunity@Work, President Obama announced TechHire at the National League of Cities Conference. To help ensure its success in implementation, we are supporting TechHire and the wide range of public, private, and social sector institutions committed to it—21 communities and over 300 employers (and growing) across the country—to enable the widespread adoption of inclusive hiring and accelerated training into IT jobs, across all industries.

I'm energized by this mission, and by the outstanding team that we've begun assembling to achieve it. We've been blessed from the start with committed partners, from non-profits such as Hope Street Group and LaunchCode , to innovative for-profit companies such as LinkedIn , CEB, and Capital One , to the 20 other institutions who made TechHire commitments, to our launching pad and wonderful home at New America. Both Opportunity@Work's direct impact and its policy implications are central to expanding employment opportunity, raising wages and job mobility, and achieving more robust and more inclusive economic growth in the United States, by unlocking the potential of our undervalued human capital.

Tens of millions of Americans can benefit from this labor market rewiring - such as mid-career industry switchers, un-credentialed workers who mastered their skills on the job, those who attended college but didn't graduate, full-time parents re-entering the workforce, the long-term unemployed, skilled immigrants, and the most diverse generation of young Americans in history as they reach for the first rungs of their career ladders.

That's the basic story. If you want more information about what Opportunity@Work is doing – much of it in conjunction with TechHire - you can visit some of the links below. I would particularly encourage you to take a look at the LaShana Lewis video, if you've never seen it. Millions of Americans like LaShana have the potential but not the path to opportunity. Enabling them to achieve their full potential is why Opportunity@Work exists.

Madame Secretary,
Small item that I wanted to flag for you: we are being fairly aggressive about sending cease and desist letters to companies selling merchandise with your logo. We are fine with people using it for non-commercial purposes but want to protect exclusive rights for selling merchandise (for the purposes of list building and fundraising).
So far, people have removed merchandise after receiving the letter but it may be necessary to file suit. President Obama's campaign did this and we will be prepared to handle press inquiries and explain that this is standard practice.
I just wanted you to know in case this comes up. Please let me or Marc know if you have questions or issues.

OBAMA BIDEN

John --

This week, we need to make some of the last, tough choices about what the final push of this grassroots organization will look like -- where we can compete and how fiercely.

It's a close race, and you hold the power here. According to our records associated with this exact email address:

-- Your supporter ID is: 6877436
-- Most recent donation: $0
-- Total amount donated in 2012: $0

It looks like you haven't given yet. That may be because you gave using a different email address than you're using now -- if we've got this wrong, I apologize.

But if you indeed have not yet given, there's still time. Just not very much -- this Friday is one of our last opportunities to plan for the final weeks of this campaign.

Can you give $5 or more today ahead of this Friday's big budget deadline? That's just 19 cents for each day we have left.

We're looking at what we have in the bank by Friday at midnight in order to determine how many more offices we can open, how many new field organizers we can hire, and how fiercely we can compete in critical battleground states.

As we face these difficult decisions, the President needs your support if we're going win.

Chip in $5 or more now, before the big budget deadline:

Dear Credit Union Cherry Blossom Finishers and Volunteers:

On the cusp of summer, this will be our final communication about this spring's race. Thanks for participating or volunteering.

Results Book:

We are pleased to provide you with a link to the electronic version of the 2015 Credit Union Cherry Blossom Ten Mile Run results publication.

You can view the "Results Book" either in .pdf format or as an online flip book.

Some notes on the different formats:

FLIP BOOK : If you choose to view the publication in "flip book" format, depending on your browser and screen size, you may find the Full Screen view to offer the sharpest clarity. To get to Full Screen view, please do the following:

- Click the link and let the publication load.
- Once it loads, roll your mouse over the downward pointing carat at the center of the top border of the page.
- A horizontal bar of icons will open. Click the one to the right of the "?" button that contains four outward pointing arrows; this will put you in "full screen" mode.
- You can zoom in by clicking anywhere on the publication (click again to return to your original view). You can adjust the scale of zoom from 75% to 200% by using the slider bar that appears on your screen. The portion of each page that you can view will depend on the percentage zoom you select, and on the size of your screen.
- You can search the entire publication for a particular name or phrase by clicking on the magnifying glass (third from left) in the icon bar.

.PDF FORMAT : If you choose to print all 90 pages, you should set your printer options to "Fit to Printable Area" in order for it to print correctly.

Inside the publication you will find stories about the race, complete final results for both the Credit Union Cherry Blossom 9.39 Mile Run and the 5K Run-Walk, the names of all of our volunteers, photos and statistics. We hope you will enjoy the final memento from this year's race.

All-Time Searchable Database:

The 2015 results have been uploaded into the All-Time Searchable Database at http://www.cballtimeresults.org/ . While your official time is your time for 9.39 miles, we have included your projected 10 mile time as well. Click on your 2015 performance to surface it along with other graphs about your performance. If you find any errors or omissions (hometown, etc.) - or if you ran under different names ("Bill" or "William" or under a maiden and married name in different years) - in your listings, you can email us at searchable@cherryblossom.org with the change that you think needs to be made. Please put "Searchable Database" in the header of your message. We will update the All-Time Searchable database as we receive and approve corrections.

The "100-Mile" Club:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We have changed the name of our "Streakers" program to the 100 Mile Club. (We felt that the word "Streaker" was a misnomer, because we do not require the 10 races needed to qualify for "Streaker" status to have been run consecutively.) The 100 Mile Club is based on the number of miles you have completed in the event over the years. If you have completed the 10 mile 10 times, you are a member and are entitled to a guaranteed entry, provided you do not get in through the lottery for the 2016 race and you contact us prior to February 1, 2016. Miles accumulated in either the 10 mile or the 5K Run-Walk are count towards the 100 Mile Club.

Participants who were "Streakers" because they had participated in some combination of ten 10-Mile Runs and 5K Run-Walks, but who fall below the 100 mile threshold under the new system, will be "grandfathered" in as 100 Mile Club members so that no one will lose eligibility for a guaranteed entry based on the changeover to the 100 Mile Club. The All-Time Searchable Database is an excellent resource to determine if you qualify for the 100 Mile Club for the 2016 race. If you qualify, you will see a banner that says 100 Mile Club with your data.

Note to Users of Internet Explorer: We have heard about some issues with the All-Time Searchable Database and some versions of Internet Explorer. If you cannot access your history, please go to "tools-> compatibility settings" and add http://www.cballtimeresults.org to the list of websites to be viewed in "Compatibility View."

Looking Ahead to the 2016 Lottery:

Our 44th running will take place be on Sunday, April 3, 2016. We are back in our traditional first Sunday in April date. We will be using a lottery system to select entrants.

The lottery period will extend from Tuesday, December 1 through Friday, December 11, 2015. Complete lottery results will be posted on Tuesday, December 15, 2015. A few days before the lottery opens we will send out reminder emails to everyone who entered the lottery for the 2015 race - even those who were not selected. If your email changes during the year, go to the website and sign up for the email lottery notification list with your new email address. All of the latest lottery information will be posted on the event website, www.cherryblossom.org .

Everyone should put the following emails on your preferred email list so our messages will not be rejected as spam. We cannot take responsibility for individuals missing the lottery because our reminder message was trapped in their spam folder:

- cherryblossomtenmile@gmail.com
- lottery_results@cherryblossom.org
- registrationhelp@marathonguide.com

If you know individuals who did not enter in 2015 but who would like to receive the reminder email about the 2016 entry process, you can tell them to register to receive the reminder email on the website, www.cherryblossom.org .

Two-Time Loser Entries

Once again we will be offering a guaranteed entry code to anyone who was rejected in the lottery for entry into the race for the last two years (2014 and 2015) and did not gain entry into the race by a guaranteed code from a volunteer, through your credit union, or another source. This code, which will be emailed to you in mid-to-late November, will allow you to bypass the lottery and gain entry directly into the event. Unless you have changed your last name or your email address, we know who you are so you do not need to take any action other than being on the lookout for an email containing your entry code in late November, 2015. If you have changed names or emails, please contact us at lottery_updates@cherryblossom.org with the new information and place in the header "Two Year Lottery Exemption Update."

Guaranteed Entries Through Teens Run DC

Guaranteed entries for the 2016 race are available through our partnership with Teens Run DC. TRDC is recruiting mentors now for its 2015-16 season! TRDC partners with DC public schools to empower at-risk youth ages 11-20 through a youth mentoring, life skills training, and distance running program. Run or walk with a student and you will together set and achieve goals for training, racing, and life.

Mentors commit to working with an individual student for a full academic year and participate in regular Saturday morning practices from 10 to 12 noon with the TRDC community in Anacostia Park, near the Anacostia Metro Station. Program commitment is 10 hours a month, September through June.

For more information and to apply, go to http://www.teensrundc.org/get-involved/mentors/, or contact ben@teensrundc.org .

You can also gain entry into this year's Marine Corps Marathon by raising $500 for TRDC. For more information, visit http://www.teensrundc.org/support/marine-corp-marathon/how-it-works/

Volunteer Guaranteed Entries

In late November, all of our 2015 volunteers will automatically receive a guaranteed entry code that will enable them to bypass the lottery. No further action is needed on your part to receive this code.

Once again, thanks for taking part in our event. We look forward to seeing everyone next year for our 44th running.

Sincerely,
Event Director Phil Stewart, Deputy Race Director Becky Lambros and the Entire Organizing Committee

Let us also remember Warren for his delightfully acerbic wit and for the pose he enjoyed taking as the faculty's bad boy skeptic. Warren was proud of Georgetown's clinical program, which had been built up by Associate Dean Jack Kramer, but also a bit dubious about its role in a university. One day in the mid-1980s, just three of us, Kramer, Warren, and myself, happened to be standing in the old mail room on what was then the fourth floor, when a new issue of the Georgetown Law Journal was being stuffed into all of the faculty mailboxes. Kramer extracted his copy, and in his role as the law school's number one clinic booster he exclaimed, "Look, Warren! Schrag has an article in here with more than 1400 footnotes!" Without missing a beat, Warren replied, "Yeah, but are any of them any good?"

Warren played a role in my decision to move to Georgetown, not simply because of the aforementioned intellect and wit but because I thought that if Georgetown happily found a place for Warren on its faculty, it must be a good place indeed. Every law school needs a Warren or two on its faculty, and he is missed.

Warren was an amazing colleague. At the lunchtime faculty workshop I ran when I first came to GULC, he felt so vindicated and triumphant that law and economics was finally being discussed at GULC. But at the same time, he was so frustrated that progress wasn't faster and that even I wasn't a sufficiently true-believer in the enterprise. He was a huge contributor to the intellectual vitality of this place back in those days. Georgetown would not be the same today without his efforts.

How very sad. I always found it a joy to see Warren at a faculty workshop or at a Friday L&E colloquium. I got to know him only after he became emeritus, and I was always struck by his continuing interest in new ideas — and his continuing rigor. A true scholar. And a wonderful dinner companion!

I'll also second Sherm's observation: Warren was central to building the law school we have today, for which I owe him (together with others) a debt of gratitude.

Dear colleagues,

I regret to report the death of our retired colleague, Professor Warren Schwartz, yesterday evening, after a long illness. Warren was a pioneer in the Law and Economics movement and taught here for more than 20 years, after many years at the University of Virginia. He had an intense devotion to scholarship leavened by an impish Brooklyn wit.

We do not yet have information about a memorial service but it is likely to be held in the first half of the coming week. I will pass on more information, when I receive it. Also, will consider the best way for Warren to be memorialized at the Law Center.

With a heavy heart,

I am not a US Citizen having lived in Israel for my 80 latest years. After Nine Eleven 2001 Catastrophe I have been trying discovering innovative methods capable of reducing the danger of Terror Organizations for the US as well as Entire Civilization.23 Section Analysis has been sent to your Office hopefully to Be exercised by US Authorities averting any Terror Aggravation that's a Conjugated product of Drug immense Proliferation in the Entire World culminated in Nine Eleven Horrendousness To my best assessment,
Recurrent disasters, due to Innovative UAV Development could have been averted My suggestion would have been meeting US Experts Team specializing in Aeronautics, Explosives and Electronics at the US Embassy in Tel Aviv
For clarifications, don't let one billion of Fanatic Muslims decreasing a Super Power as the US to its knees. Presidential Ordinance might have opened US Emergency Magazines in order to get thousands of UAV aloft attacking
Narcotic Vegetation fields in Afghanistan and Central America averting Dope Permeation even to the US itself from Colombia and Peru via Mexico.
As being practiced today. I believe to have developed an Original Invention Utilizing Unmanned Aerial Vehicles with special Defoliants capable of transmuting Entire Global Narcotic Vegetation to Arid Innocuous Gigantic Deserts inevitably with the anticipated advantages:1) Severing Terror Organizations from their Financial Sources
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Addicts from awful Agony and Cruel Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Military Intensity by Reinforcement of ten thousands of UAV
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops from Afghanistan much earlier under such circumstances.
5) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has eroded to a great extent since Nine Eleven Horrendousness.
6) Desertification of Poppy-Opium Bushes will plausibly deter El Qaida from continuance of its heavy Armament pointed against Innocent Population
7) If President Obama decides stopping US Connivance about the Raging of Dual Headed Monster (Drugs and Terror Culminated in Nine Eleven Horrendousness)
He might have been eligible admitting into the Parlor of Great Presidents having extricated Mankind from the Two Notorious Calamities Hovering on our Civilization.
8) To my great apprehension, the currently Incumbent President is going to be the first in US History to lose a Justifiable War against a Cruelest Enemy that could have Been imagined
9) According to my suggestion a group of Experts should have been dispatched
From the US to Israel specializing in Electronics, Law, Aviation and Explosives for consultations with me about the Dual Headed Monster (Drugs and Terror) Decapitation at US Embassy in Tel-Aviv in favor of Entire Civilization Salvation.
To my great Astonishment no response has reached my mailbox from any of US

10) Could US Senate intercession be contributory?

Be Successful

MIKE HONDA for CONGRESS

Hi John,

There are only TWO days left until the end of 2014 and the last Federal fundraising deadline of the year. This cycle you stood by me and together, we won a tough re-election campaign so I can continue to deliver for my community, California and our country.

The 2016 election cycle began after Election Day and it is absolutely essential that we replenish our resources after taking part in one of the most expensive US House races in the country. There is still too much important work to be done in Washington and Silicon Valley and we cannot let a lack of funds make us vulnerable to political attacks - that is a distraction we cannot afford.

How much we raise by Midnight this Wednesday will determine our early budget and show the world our commitment to building on a well earned victory in November.

Make a contribution today to help us meet our goal for Wednesday's critical end of the year deadline.

In November, we had an incredible turnout for a midterm election, in spite of the negative attacks from a super PAC funded by wealthy, right wing interests. We were victorious and it is because of supporters like you. I want to make sure we start the New Year off on the right foot.

Contribute today to make sure we have the resources to reach our goal.

I cannot thank you enough for your incredible outpouring of support - we really appreciate all that you can do. I hope you are enjoying the holidays with your family and have a prosperous New Year!

Sincerely,

Mike Honda

Hello, Neera and John.
I just had a nice meeting with Vuk Jeremic.
As you may recall, he is the former Foreign Minister of Serbia (key leader in the anti-Milosevic movement); former President of the UN and currently the founder and Chairman of the Center for International Relations and Sustainable Development in Belgrade. He is also the publisher of an impressive Foreign Affairs-like publication called Horizons.

He is huge admirer of CAP's work and asked if I could make an introduction to the two of you. Before connecting you via email, I wanted to be sure that you are comfortable with it. He would like to consider a joint project, perhaps on sustainability at some point.

Just let me know.

Thanks!

SENATOR CLINTON CALLS ON PENTAGON TO REPORT ON ITS RESPONSE TO DEFICIENT KEVLAR HELMETS

Troops May Have Been Put at Risk by Inadequate Armor

WASHINGTON, DC – Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton today called on the Pentagon to report on its response to allegations that as many as 2.2 million Kevlar helmets given to U.S. troops have been substandard and inadequate. In a letter to Defense Secretary Robert Gates, Senator Clinton expressed great concern that troops in the field may have been put at risk by deficient equipment produced for the military by a manufacturer that has agreed to settle a $159 million lawsuit brought by the Department of Justice over the faulty helmets. Despite the lawsuit, the Pentagon recently awarded the same manufacturer a new $74 million contract for more helmets.

"Providing military equipment for our men and women in uniform is a public trust and it is reprehensible when any contractor betrays that trust. We need to insure that our men and women and uniform have the best equipment possible. That's why I've previously joined with Senator Webb to insure that the Army conducts testing for body armor to make sure our troops have the best possible protection and it's why I am asking the Department of Defense to respond to these disturbing reports," said Senator Clinton.

According to press reports, a Kevlar helmet manufacturer was sued by the Department of Justice for producing up to 2.2 million deficient helmets for the military. Whistleblowers from within the company accused the manufacturer of shortchanging the armor in the helmets, rendering troops more vulnerable to injury from shrapnel and other projectiles. The company recently settled the suit for $2 million without admitting wrongdoing. Nonetheless, the Pentagon awarded the same manufacturer a major new contract to produce new helmets.

From her position on the Senate Armed Services Committee, Senator Clinton has worked for years to address the problem of inadequate body armor for U.S. troops. She has urged the Pentagon to provide additional body armor as quickly as possible to troops in Iraq and Afghanistan, and called for an Armed Services Committee hearing to investigate the situation and for a Government Accountability Office (GAO) investigation to focus on how the Pentagon's procurement decisions were made for this equipment. When reports emerged suggesting that there may be better body armor available on the market than the Interceptor Body Armor system our men and women in uniform are being issued, Senator Clinton joined with Senator Jim Webb of Virginia to request that the GAO reassess the effectiveness and reliability of all the body armor systems currently being issued by the military services and Special Operations Command. This ongoing reassessment will also determine what steps should be taken to ensure that the Pentagon is procuring and fielding only the best body armor for our troops.

The text of Senator Clinton's letter is below:

February 7, 2008

The Honorable Robert M. Gates
Secretary of Defense
The United States Department of Defense
The Pentagon
Suite 319
Washington, D.C. 20301

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I am writing to express my concern regarding recent news reports that a Department of Defense (DoD) contractor has been failing to meet the government's "critical" minimum standard in the production of Kevlar for helmets issued to servicemen and women, including those who have deployed to Iraq and Afghanistan. According to the reports, the contractor, Sioux Manufacturing, agreed to pay $2 million to settle a lawsuit brought by the Department of Justice.

I am particularly concerned that these reports implied that while the Department of Justice led investigative efforts, the Department of Defense took a less active role in investigating the allegations of substandard manufacturing on the part of Sioux Manufacturing. For this reason, I request that you provide my staff with information regarding DoD's efforts to investigate the allegations raised by former employees of Sioux Manufacturing to ensure that helmets issued to our soldiers meet critical minimum safety standards.

We have a solemn obligation to provide our brave men and women in uniform with the finest equipment available, particularly when they are being sent into harm's way. Perhaps nothing is more important for our servicemembers than body armor and helmets of the highest quality. I have been pushing for improved body armor for our troops for more than two years, and while progress has been made, there is clearly much more to be done.

Thank you for your prompt consideration of my request and I look forward to hearing back from you on this critical issue.

Sincerely,

Hillary Rodham Clinton

Emily's List has produced some new research from focus groups where they showed footage of HRC remarks--some from summer/fall appearances (unfortunately, I don't think any of her campaigning events were in there). Apparently it's very helpful and I imagine could offer guidance for future remarks and even policy.
Unless there are any objections, I'll try to arrange a briefing for us in DC. Jake, if you'd prefer to do remotely, we have decent video conference capability at Perkins.

Subject: RE: Hi it's Huma

Huma ,

Following up on our conversation , some observations and suggestions.

The observations are anecdotal , if you agree with them you can either accept them or data test them through research.

When President Clinton ran for office in 1992 an new generation of "bundlers" emerged. They had been just below the surface Learning the business in the 1988 campaign(Terry McCauliffe and David Jones with Gephardt ;Peter knight , Ken Jarin ,Alan Kessler, Gordon Giffin ,Vance Opperman ,Elizabeth Bagley, Pam Eakes, yours truly and others with Gore, Michael Adler with Biden, Bob Farmer and Marvin Rosen with Dukakis,)and in 92 fully emerged to put a new generation of leadership into office. David Wilhelm , Rahm Emmanuel, George Stephanopoulos, Michael Whouley ., Paul Carey ,Regina Montoya , emerged in the 92 campaign along with a new infusion of time line younger fundraisers like Jorge Perez, Chris Korge, Paul Cejas Clay Constantine, Alan Solomont, Jack Rosen, Arthur Schechter…

There are others who came along Carol Penske., Beth Doesertz ,to name a few..

Kerry recruited a few new ones like Alex Heckler but essentially it was still the same group…Lew Solomon was always an outlier This group and others took rotating leadership roles in various important campaigns until 2008 ..

Then a new group of bundlers emerged in their late 30's and early 40's people like Matthew Barzun, Frank Sanchez, Henry Munoz, Paula Boggs, Kurt Wagar, Suzie LeVine ,Andrew Weinstein along with them a new group of political talent emerged many of whom are currently employed by you. These types of individuals were not well represented on Thursday.

It seems to me that many more of your 100 plus bundlers must emerge from the 35 to 45 group. Ideally they should not be legacies but individuals who are making their way up the latter to leadership in their communities and wish to promote large amount of time and resources to this effort because they believe that the effort will insure a better future for their families, businesses , communities and country will be well served by their effort here. They also wish to network with like -minded entrepreneurial emerging professionals and business leaders. It is their networks, employees , business associates, that are the back bones of communities day in and day out. The 55 plus crowd has money yes, but the 35 plus crowd makes or breaks campaigns. They bring money , marbles and chalk…the whole package.
This group also needs to understand sending a group email is not the type of networking needed to bundle large sums of money , unless the rules of fundraising for bundlers have completely changed during the last decade.

These platitudes aside ,

And you may have already given some thought to this and if you have , please forgive the redundancy.
If my observations present a concern -what can be done to attract the 35 plus bundler to this campaign

Some suggestions. Have your political staff who used to work for Obama identify the young Obama bundlers who did not perform or underperformed to date, set time aside from the candidate and campaign leadership to meet with them and talk to them separately. You might do a series of dinners with them in New Hampshire , Iowa, South Carolina, and Nevada in which they are invited to bring 10 k a piece. Theoretically , they would be asked to come to a primary /caucus state to engage taking less of the candidates time while giving them a unique experience to Meet the local staff on the ground and talk to HRC in a primary ,or caucus setting; this should be done by specific word of mouth invitation and emphasize it is for those who bundled large sums in the past but have not yet fully participated in the 2016 campaign .Preferably everyone in the room would be under 45 who has come to meet HRC and by coming they show they would like to be persuaded to be more engaged. By keeping the meetings word of mouth it will add to the exclusivity and importance of them.

Identify the new performers and promote them .Have your staff Identify the next generation of fundraisers those who have raised in the 27k range and are 35 to 45 years old .Have them mentored by your established fundraisers. Arrange small dinners for them with your established fundraisers so Ideas can be exchanged on how the established fundraisers can teach the 35 to 45 year olds to access their emerging networks.

Over the next three months try to set aside time for the underperforming Obama bundlers and the emerging 35 year olds (preferably non legacies) with HRC as she travels to their communities. Either around an event or separate OTR's .Make sure when this happens it is with this group exclusively.

Obviously the top line narrative of the campaign cannot be experience alone to attract this group. Since the beginning of time, This group has always been a disruptive group … It is my gut feeling that the uniqueness of the possibility of having first woman president resonates much more with the 55 plus set than the 35 plus set

And this group always thinks youth and enthusiasm is more valuable than age and experience. Clinton 92 ,Obama 08.Reagan,the exception as I understand it did attract a youthful group of financial backers(It's morning in America…),although I am not intimate with the particulars of the Reagan campaign having worked for Carter.

I end where I began, while not a precise statistical indicator, an anecdotal indicator to me in a Presidential campaign(Carter Staff 1975) is where the young entrepreneurial money is going. I believe there are ways to promote the campaign to be more accessible to this money which will have intangible political benefits.

For what it's worth…

Of course it goes without saying , but should still be said 47 million is a phenomenal start. Congratulations to all. These observations are made to be disregarded if considered as critical or unhelpful or to be accepted to the extent they are found to be helpful as part of a team effort.

Thank you all for your great effort on behalf of the country and my family and me.

Ted Cruz is starting to place for a one day flight on 4/5 in IA & SC. So far have seen spending in Quad Cities, Charleston, and Columbia. This might be just a Sunday show/Meet the Press buy. A few hundred dollars in each market. Will update as we learn more.

It's hard to tell exactly what you/we'd be getting from this, given the lack of specificity in the proposal, but I can tell you that we're already working on the votes on key issues, and will, at some point soon (once the book is reworked) be shifting to more detail on the issues and hopefully working with some allies to get more information so as not to reinvent the wheel. However much of this money is paying for that should not be spent. Beyond that, I'd want to know:
On the issues, what's included? All quotes, statements, releases, floor statements, cosponsorships, etc? Will they include information on his policies from the various campaigns? Will they do any work on the budget—total dollar amount cut from various programs? Specific earmarks?
For the committees, what information will be included? All committee votes? Detailed information on markups?
On the money, what's included? Will it just be a list of donors, or will there be analysis of the money? If so, what kind of analysis? Will it include research on top bundlers/donors/industries? Will they be looking into potential quid pro quos? Ties to legislation, etc?

claims what he meant to say was that we should just defund Planned Parenthood. Maybe someone should clue Jeb in to what Planned Parenthood actually does – it provides vital health care to millions of American women.

I've been fighting for women and families my entire adult life, and I'm tired of the double speak. I'm tired of women being shamed and blamed and dismissed. This isn't complicated: When you attack Planned Parenthood, you attack women's health. And when you attack women's health, you attack America's health.

Laura,

Thanks very much for getting back to me. The four lawyers are myself (information below), Sabin Willett (with Bingham in Boston), Charlie Carpenter and Steve Truitt (with Pepper Hamilton here in D.C.). We all represent individuals in GTMO who are cleared for release or, in some case, even not enemy combatants (such as the Uyghurs that Sabin and I, along with others, represent).

We are interesting in briefing the transition team on the practical issues associated with men in our clients' positions. In particular, we want to make sure that the transition team has the information it needs to understand that many or most of the men at GTMO, contrary to much of the media spin lately, do not need a trial. They are not even alleged to have committed a crime, there is nothing to try, they simply need to be released. The Bush administration has, in fact, already decided that this is so but either refuses to release them or claims to be prevented from releasing them. This includes the situation involving the Uyghurs who were ordered into the United States by the first district court judge to hold a hearing only to now be tied up in appeals based on immigration law arguments made by the Bush Justice department.

Please let me know if you need any further information in order to hook us up with the right person.

Thanks again,

I think it would be helpful to have Ira come by when they're here at the end of the month to get him/them on the same page.

Oh no!! That's awful about the doors. Of course I'll check. Have you reached out to Bob Seigal and the super, or shall I?

10C and 11C are asking over $2900/SF, more than new developments. Should be good for us as we are offering the same plan, higher floor and virtually unused.

Hunkered down with the family, some good reading and comfort foods for the day! ❄

Thanks

Subject:	Fwd: Hillary Clinton's New College Compact Includes Historic Investment for South Carolina's HBCUs

Press release sent out by Stephanie about the College Compact's investment in HBCUs.

Hillary Clinton's New College Compact Includes Historic Investment for South Carolina's HBCUs

Clinton Plan Will Provide Tuition Free Education at Predominantly Black Institutions in SC

Columbia, SC – As part of the New College Compact, Hillary Clinton announced a dedicated $25 billion fund to support private colleges, including South Carolina's private historically black colleges and universities. For those at public and private colleges, her New College Compact ensures costs won't be a barrier to entry and debt won't hold anyone back once they graduate. For those attending predominantly black technical schools and community colleges, they would attend tuition-free. As of today, HBCU's are serving more than 300,000 students.

For all public HBCUs, under the New College Compact students should never have to take out a loan to earn four-year degrees and will not have to pay a dime to earn two-year degrees because the plan:

✓ Invests new federal funds in states that commit to investing more in public HBCUs, meaning that HBCUs benefit from additional federal as well as state support under her plan.

✓ Invests more funds when public schools enroll low- and middle-income students, meaning that HBCUs, which play a key role in educating underserved students, will be eligible for proportionally more support.

✓ Ensures that Pell recipients at these public HBCUs can direct their full Pell funding toward living expenses.

For all private HBCUs, Clinton's plan:

✓ Creates a dedicated $25 billion fund to provide support to private nonprofit schools that serve low- and middle-income students and help them build the skills they need, of which private HBCUs are a prime example.

And for all HBCUs, both public and private, Clinton's plan:

✓ Significantly cuts the interest rates that students pay on any loans they take out so that the government never profits on the loans.

✓ Enables students with debt to refinance their loans at low current rates. Parents with PLUS loans will also be able to refinance at current rates.

✓ Extends the American Opportunity Tax Credit with its $1,000 refundable credit to low-income families sending their sons and daughters to these schools.

✓ Ensures that parents who borrow through the Parent PLUS program will not have to take out such high levels of debt in order to send their children and grandchildren to these schools.

✓ Enables students never to have to repay more than 10 percent of their monthly income.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

✓ Builds on programs such as TRIO and GEAR UP to invest in student support, including child care for students who are parents, to help all students stay in school and boost completion.

"Hillary Clinton is committed to making college affordable for all of South Carolina's students and families. Her proposal for a federal-state partnership is an innovative idea that will help lower the skyrocketing cost of higher education," said Senator Darrell Jackson and graduate of Benedict College.

"For far too long, our leaders haven't address the unacceptable rise in cost of college. No challenge is too big for Hillary Clinton, who is ready to tackle this issue that has gone unaddressed for far too long. With her bold ideas, students would have the opportunity to attend public HBCU's like South Carolina State University without loans for tuition," said Bryanta Maxwell, President of the Young Democrats of South Carolina and graduate of South Carolina State University.

The $25 billion fund, which includes non-profit, private Historically Black Colleges, was based on the America's College Promise Act, introduced in Congress in July by Rep. Bobby Scott. His legislation is designed to create new pathways to four-year degrees at HBCUs as well as other MSIs. The new funds help the schools lower attendance costs and implement supports to improve student outcomes.

You can read more information on the benefits for HBCUs in the New College Compact here .

Dear John,
It was great to see you in Beijing last week. I really found you in such a good shape! Ready for all the intense activity you´ll be leading in the coming months!! That´s fantastic and quite reassuring!!
I´m back home after warming up the campaign muscles too.
In that context, we may use/ask you some involvement to share with my colleagues the work the CAP developed with the brittish Labours on the challenge to shape a new prosperity for the midle classes as well as your previous work on re-industrialising America. There are tow points under this demand: the documents -which may be on line- and a possible visit and/or discussion on some lessons learnt on your side. It could even be part of a concrete workshop once we know when we´ll be having the national elections.

There is also another more sensitive thing to share with you. I´m trying to bring Pedro Sanchez to NY on the ocasion of the SDG´s summit (it conflicts with the catalan elections-and still uncertain if with the national ones-, so it´s still unclear but he likes the idea and is willing to come). If this is the case, I wonder if there may be an opportunity to meet Hillary. It´s still far away, but I´d apreciate your advice on this concrete point.

Warmest (literal in temperature terms!) regards from Madrid, Teresa

Subject:	FYI - Politico/AFT

Just a quick heads up for you. There is a story coming from Politico with folks critical of AFT for endorsing HRC so early. There may be additional pieces from Time and Reuters.

The criticism comes from (1) some AFT members who don't support Randi – 3K in a petition; (2) other labor leaders (likely unnamed) who wanted AFT to wait till end of month when they do full interviews.

We've coordinated our response with AFT Comm Staff. They are doing most of the heavy lifting (as they should) to respond. We pointed out why it's helpful to have early endorsements and we'll be on record in "appreciation" of the endorsement.

Palmieri asked me to make sure you were looped in/aware.

Subject:	Re: Fw: Campbell's New Position on GMO Labeling AND IMPLICATIONS FOR HILLARY

John, I am not sure if you realize that there is a giant opportunity for Hillary here, so allow me to take a moment to elaborate.

Honestly, it probably took a strong woman CEO to get the first major food company to take such a big step to side with consumers. Campbells CEO Denise Morrison has looked the rest of the food industry in the eye and told them in no uncertain terms that the time has come to stop fighting consumers' desire for more transparency, but instead to view that demand as an opportunity. She clearly understands that moms out there are scared, uncertain and justifiably distrustful whether large food companies are really watching out for them and their children. And so in this one simple move, by challenging the status quo on the single most controversial and white hot lightning rod food issue - GMO's - she has completely changed the discussion to one of working WITH consumers and progressive activists, instead of hiding behind the traditional corporate fortress walls.

Forty years of interacting positively with consumers leads me to the simple conclusion that successful electioneering AND governing are no different than marketing any consumer products: it all comes down to trust. And in this case, that means convincing women voters and those who feel disenfranchised that they can trust her to watch out for their interests.

So this brings me back to the labeling issue. Although it may seem like a trivial sideline matter, this is in fact one of those topics that is on many women's minds, not because they know anything about GMO's, but because GMO's are symbolic of the bigger narrative of our foods being produced by people who care only about profits and not really about what is best for our families. This is why last summer I urged her to recognize that, just as Campbells did in their announcement, she can be supportive of GMO's (and therefore not alienate the companies who support them) while absolutely telegraphing her strong belief that people have the right to know and therefore we should have mandatory labeling as a federal policy.

To cut to the chase, I know that this issue does not count as much as the Supreme Court, but on the heels of Denise Morrison's decision, it would be brilliant for Hillary to publicly communicate her support of Campbells decision in particular or her support for mandatory GMO labeling in general. The subtle message here is that we need strong, fresh thinking from powerful woman leaders like Denise and her. And the harder hitting message will be that Hillary believes that all citizens deserve this right. This would be stronger than anything Bernie has said and will send a powerful message to both progressives who have been caught up in his spell and to mainstream moms who we will badly need when the real race begins.

Finally, John, Bernie is really scoring his points by trying to inflame a sort of class warfare of citizens vs. corporations. With this decision, Denise Morrison just brilliantly showed that corporations can be trusted. Hillary could just as brilliantly and deftly do the same thing by immediately announcing into a speech or an interview the ad hoc comment that she "just heard about the Campbells decision and applauds this responsible company for taking the side of the consumer in supporting GMO labeling because it is the right thing to do." This would be a powerful contrast to Bernie's shrillness.

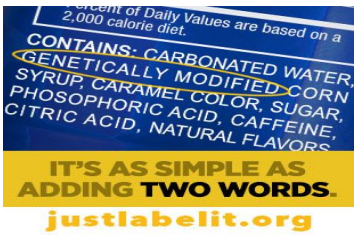

Happy to discuss if you want. And in fact, I will be in DC with Tom Vilsack next week if you want to meet.

Warm regards,

Campbell Labels Will Disclose G.M.O. Ingredients

By STEPHANIE STROM JAN. 7, 2016

Breaking from its industry rivals, Campbell Soup will become the first major food company to begin disclosing the presence of genetically engineered ingredients like corn, soy and sugar beets in its products.

The company, the maker of brands like Pepperidge Farm, Prego, Plum Organics and V8 in addition to its namesake soups, is taking the unusual step — and possibly risking sales by alienating consumers averse to genetically modified organisms — as big food corporations face increasing pressure to be more open about their use of such ingredients.

Food companies have begun printing labels to comply with a new labeling law in Vermont, which has become a battleground over labeling that other states have been watching closely. Beginning in July, Vermont will require disclosure of genetically engineered ingredients, a measure opposed by most major food companies, which are seeking to supersede any state's legislation with a voluntary federal solution.

Campbell is also breaking with its peers by calling for federal action to make mandatory a uniform labeling system of foods that contain such ingredients, commonly known as G. M.O. labeling, said Denise Morrison, chief executive of Campbell.

Campbell is calling for mandatory labeling of products that use ingredients from G.M.O. crops. Credit Campbell Soup Company

"We're optimistic that a federal solution can be reached in a reasonable amount of time, but if that's not the case, we're preparing to label all our products across the portfolio," Ms. Morrison said in an interview.

She said about three-quarters of the company's products contained ingredients derived from corn, canola, soybeans or sugar beets, the four largest genetically engineered crops . The change in labeling is expected to take 12 to 18 months.

The first example provided by the company, for a SpaghettiO's label prepared for Vermont, is sparsely worded and does not specify which individual ingredients are genetically altered. It simply states at the bottom of the label: "Partially produced with genetic engineering. For more information about G.M.O. ingredients, visit WhatsinMyFood.com ."

Other companies have reformulated a handful of products to replace such ingredients. General Mills now produces non-G.M.O. Cheerios, and others have put labels on some products verifying that they contain no genetically engineered components, like Tropicana juices.

But none have gone as far as Campbell, whose move is reminiscent of that by Whole Foods Markets, which almost three years ago created an uproar when it announced that, as of 2018, it would require all products sold in its stores to have labels disclosing the presence of ingredients from genetically altered crops.

More mainstream grocers like Kroger and Safeway have moved to highlight their selection of organic products, which by law cannot contain any genetically modified ingredients, and have quietly urged big food manufacturers not to oppose demands for G.M.O. labeling.

The number of products verified by the Non-GMO Project, a nonprofit group that certifies foods that are free of ingredients from genetically engineered sources, is now in the tens of thousands.

But many companies have long argued that a patchwork of state laws with different requirements for G.M.O. labeling will be cumbersome and expensive, and the quirks in the Vermont law are making their case.

Ms. Morrison noted, for example, that in Vermont, the cans of SpaghettiOs will have to be wrapped in one label stating that the product contains ingredients from genetically engineered sources because they fall under the jurisdiction of the Food and Drug Administration. But Campbell does not have to disclose that SpaghettiOs with Meatballs contains such ingredients because that product is governed by the Department of Agriculture — and the Vermont law applies only to products overseen by the F.D.A.

"A state-by-state patchwork of laws could be incredibly costly not only for our company but for the entire industry," Ms. Morrison said. "That's why we want the federal government to come up with a national standard that is mandatory."

Campbell will seek advice from the Department of Agriculture and the F.D.A. about what language it might use on its packaging. In an interview with The Des Moines Register in December, Tom Vilsack, the agriculture secretary, said he planned to hold a meeting with food companies and others in the hope of reaching a compromise before the Vermont law goes into effect.

"I'm going to challenge them to get this thing fixed," Mr. Vilsack told The Register, adding that he was worried about "chaos in the market" if other states follow suit. "That will cost the industry a substantial amount of money, hundreds of millions of dollars, if not more, and it will ultimately end up costing the consumer," he said.

A spokeswoman for the Agriculture Department said no date had been set for the meeting, nor had any decisions been made about who would attend.

Ms. Morrison said that complying with Vermont's law was expensive but that establishment of a national mandatory labeling standard to take effect over a period of time would allow companies to work the changes into their business operations with little cost. She noted that adoption of the 1990 Nutrition Labeling and Education Act, which required companies to add nutritional information to their labels, did not significantly raise costs.

Ms. Morrison said she could not speculate on how the move to label all of Campbell's products might affect the company's sales. In 2011, food manufacturers themselves introduced a program called Facts Up Front to make information about the amount of sugar, salt, fat and calories in their products even more obvious by putting it out front in an easy-to-read format, which had no notable impact on sales.

Last year, Campbell created the website that offers information about the ingredients in its products and how they are used, including those items that come from genetically engineered crops .

It discloses, for instance, that among the ingredients in Campbell's Cream of Mushroom soup, the vegetable oil, monosodium glutamate and modified food starch may come from genetically engineered sources. The website has had no apparent impact on sales, according to a company spokeswoman.

"We've always believed consumers have a right to know what's in their food," Ms. Morrison said. "We know that 92 percent of Americans support G.M.O. labeling, and transparency is a critical part of our purpose."

Phil Lempert, a food industry expert and founder of Supermarketguru.com , said it could be risky for a company to disclose genetically altered ingredients. "I think it would get a lot of credit for transparency and that its stock would get a pop, if it were publicly traded," Mr. Lempert said. "But I think a consumer could be confused by it and put the product back on the shelf and grab something else."

Mr. Lempert and other marketing experts recommended that the company use clear language to inform its consumers.

"We're in uncharted territory here," said Carl Jorgensen, director of global consumer strategy and wellness at Daymon Worldwide, a consulting firm. While studies have shown that consumers favor such labeling, he said he did not know of data collected on the impact of labels on sales.

Campbell joined other major food companies in fighting efforts to impose mandatory labeling in California and Washington State, spending more than $1 million, according to the Environmental Working Group. It is also a member of the Grocery Manufacturers Association, a trade group that has spent millions trying to get a bill passed in Congress that would make labeling voluntary and pre-empt state labeling efforts.

"We will withdraw from any coalition that doesn't support mandatory labeling," Ms. Morrison said. "We were involved in fighting the state ballots in California and Washington out of concern over a state-by-state patchwork, yet we didn't participate in the fights in any other state beyond those. Any money we did spend after that was in support of seeking a federal solution."

Subject: Campbell's New Position on GMO Labeling

Hi Gary,

I wanted you to hear from me directly that Campbell Soup Company today announced its support for the enactment of federal legislation to establish a single mandatory on-pack labeling standard for foods derived from genetically modified organisms (GMOs). The New York Times just posted a news item that will also appear in Friday morning's edition.

Campbell believes the time has come for the federal government to provide a national standard for labeling requirements to better inform consumers about this issue. The company will advocate for federal legislation that would require all foods and beverages regulated by the Food and Drug Administration and the U.S. Department of Agriculture to be clearly and simply labeled for GMOs. Campbell also supports a national standard for non-GMO claims made on food packaging. We are not endorsing any specific legislation at this time.

I have attached the statement we issued a short while ago. I welcome your questions.

Polls - Frontrunners are faltering as challengers such as Mike Huckabee and Barack Obama rewrite the script just a month before first votes are cast in the Republican and Democratic White House races, reports Univision Online, in the Spanish language version of an AFP article. “Gone are the days when media profiles painted Hillary Clinton as the “inevitable” Democratic nominee, while former Arkansas governor Huckabee has come from nowhere to shake up the Republican field,” adds the article. Karl Rove, President George W. Bush’s long-time political guru, said “the latest numbers suggested trouble for both Clinton and Giuliani.”

Primaries - The nation’s first presidential primary, for Democrats anyway, is being waged among hundreds of party insiders - superdelegates who could play a big part in selecting the nominee at next summer’s national convention, reports El Diario La Prensa (NY), Univision Online, El Nuevo Herald, Houston Chronicle, El Diario La Estrella, OregonLive.com, El Paso Times, La Voz (AZ), and El Nuevo Herald. Hillary Rodham Clinton leads Barack Obama by more than a 2-1 margin among those who have endorsed a candidate. But a little more than half of those contacted - 365 - said they haven't settled on a Democratic standard bearer. Clinton has the endorsement of 169 superdelegates. She is followed by Obama, 63; John Edwards, 34; Bill Richardson, 25; Chris Dodd, 17; Joe Biden, 8, and Dennis Kucinich, 2.

Statement of Campaign Chairman John Podesta on Benghazi Committee Election Year Delay

The U.S. House Select Committee on Benghazi announced today that it would delay its findings about the 2012 tragedy to "just months before the 2016 presidential election. " Hillary for America Campaign Chairman John Podesta released the following statement in response.

"The Gowdy Committee's admission today that it will not finish its investigation until 2016 is the most telling evidence yet that their investigation is solely about playing politics in the 2016 presidential campaign. This action is the latest example in a broad concerted effort by Republicans and their allies to launch false attacks against Hillary Clinton's record and deep experience on foreign affairs and national security.

"There have already been 21 congressional hearings, five independent or bipartisan reports, and millions of tax dollars spent in the process of investigating this three year old tragedy. This investigation would now be longer than the investigations of Iran-Contra, the Kennedy Assassination, Watergate and 9/11.

"Hillary Clinton has already spent five hours testifying at two congressional committee hearings but, as she's been saying since last year, she's happy to do it again. Unfortunately, Republicans insist her testimony is done

"Sadly, Republicans are determined to continue to exploit this tragedy in an effort to try and hurt her campaign."

CLYDEWILLIAMS2016

Dear Friend,

Former Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle announced that he will endorse me in the race to succeed Congressman Charlie Rangel (NY-13).

I hope you will join him in supporting my candidacy – and if you are in Washington, DC on November 9th I hope you'll join the fundraiser hosted by Sen. Daschle and former White House Chief of Staff and Counselor, Pete Rouse.

I am thrilled and honored to receive Senator Daschle's endorsement so early in the race. In 2008, he supported then Senator Barack Obama, long before many other party leaders publicly endorsed his campaign.

As someone who served the country for over 25 years, Sen. Daschle knows what it takes to be an effective leader in Congress.

We are at a turning point in this community and in the nation. And I am ready to fight on behalf of the constituents of New York's 13th Congressional District to address the affordable housing crisis, improve schools and provide economic security.

Senator Daschle knows that I am the only candidate in this race who can hit the ground running from day one.

Join our journey, read more about today's endorsement, and I hope to see you in Washington, on November 9th!

Diplomat, Asia Expert Kurt Campbell Joins Belfer Center as Senior Fellow

February 29, 2016

Cambridge, MA – Kurt Campbell, Chairman and CEO of The Asia Group, LLC, and former Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, has been named a Senior Fellow at Harvard Kennedy School's Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs. Widely credited with framing the Obama administration's rebalance to Asia, Campbell will focus his research at the Belfer Center on his forthcoming book, The Pivot: America's Rediscovery of the Asia-Pacific Century.

"It is difficult to overstate the importance of the Asia-Pacific to America's national security and prosperity," said Belfer Center Director Graham Allison. "It is even more difficult to overstate Kurt Campbell's qualifications on this critical subject. Many have studied U.S. foreign policy toward Asia. Far fewer have set it. Kurt has done both with high honors."

"I am so pleased to join the Belfer Center and to engage with its enormously talented community of scholars," Campbell said. "As a former professor here, I know how stimulating Harvard is, and I am looking forward to illuminating discussions with faculty, fellows, and students as I research my new book."

Along with Michèle Flournoy (also a Center Senior Fellow), Campbell co-founded in 2007 the Center for a New American Security. Earlier, he was founder and chairman of StratAsia, a strategic advisory and consultancy. In addition, he was Senior Vice President, Director of the International Security Program, and Henry A. Kissinger Chair at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. Campbell was previously Associate Professor of Public Policy and International Relations at Harvard Kennedy School.

Before serving from 2009 to 2013 as Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, Campbell was Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Asia and the Pacific, and Director on the National Security Council Staff. For his diplomatic service, Campbell has received the Secretary of State's Distinguished Service Award and top honors from Australia, New Zealand, Korea, and Taiwan.

He is the author or editor of ten books, including Difficult Transitions: Why Presidents Fail in Foreign Policy at the Outset of Power. He is a columnist for the Financial Times and a member of the Aspen Strategy Group, the Council on Foreign Relations, and the Trilateral Commission.

He received his B.A. from the University of California, San Diego and his Doctorate in International Relations from Brasenose College at Oxford University, where he was a Distinguished Marshall Scholar.

Agree on all counts with Jen. We're in a better starting place by far. I think in general we are losing something in the four challenges/fights - whatever we're going to call that stuff -- I think we have to work on making each one bigger and more robust on its own. I think this is the same point Jen is making in #3 below.

Thanks to all. Talk to you tomorrow.

Thanks, Dan

I am impressed. Think it manages to capture her particular sensibilities about everyone having a role to play while adhering to our middle class message imperatives.

Love the concept "only path to real and lasting prosperity is prosperity built by all and shared by all.' Including "built" really helps to round out the belief of everyone having a role/responsibility.

Think you all dealt with FDR deftly by comparing Great Depression to the Great Recession - and the focus on role of women during that era is an effective but subtle reminder of HRC as first POTUS.

Couple of concepts I thought were missing...

1) an acknowledgement that middle class has done their part and it is time for the well off to step it up. I agree with Jim that using "it is your time" - along with appropriate set up language - would help drive this distinction home.

2) think we could draw out more the benefits of shared prosperity and examples of what it would look like.

3). I think the Econ policy discussion doesn't quite match up with the lift of "shared prosperity built by all" from beginning of speech.
Wonder if you could draw out the theory behind corporate purpose here more to get at what it would look like if all in America was working to make America stronger.

4) relatedly, mightvconsider adding notion of how America just doesn't figure out how to survive in a changing world - we figure out how to harness that change and benefit from it. That's what we have always done from the time of the cotton gin to the industrial revolution and now with the digital age. Embracing that concept may help give the Econ section more lift.

But, moreover, this is great work. Thank you to Lissa and Favs for continued above and beyond help. I

Friend,

President Obama and I just wrapped up the Early Vote rally on the South Side of Chicago, and as he would say, I'm fired up.

I hope you are, too, because tomorrow is a big day: It's your first chance to cast a ballot in this election.

Will you pledge to vote early?

Election Day used to be a one-day fire sale, but with Early Vote we now have two weeks to get all of our supporters to the polls. And the more people who vote early, the more we can focus on the ones who haven't voted yet.

I couldn't be prouder to have the President at my side again today, and we were both blown away by the energy of the crowd.

That's exactly the kind of energy we're going to need for these last 16 days.

It's time to show our opponent, and the country, the power of people -- and tomorrow is our first chance to do it.

Thanks so much,

Governor Quinn

I spoke with Sen. Nunn just now. He is interested, honored, with provisos:

1) He needs to see if he can work it schedule-wise. He is on several boards some of which are having complex times. One (GE) meets on Thurs/Fri after election. I explained we would want him for intellectual leadership/oversight and at least to be available in person for the initial entry into the bldg and major senior level mtgs. If we go with him, he could go into DOD for first time Wed afternoon or Thurs am, but not later on Thurs or Fri, so we need to bear that in mind.

2) Ethics. He wants to do pro bono but wants to review ethics and other form (sent to him) and consult with one of our lawyers. He is not lobbyist or foreign agent, has no business before DOD, but does serve on several boards and at least one, GE, does biz with DOD. Wants to be sure that's all cool.

3) Personnel: He is excited about Michelle. Doesn't know Lynn except by reputation. He would want to be able to consult informally (w/o seeking additional clearances for them, Category 3 of outside advisor) with Hamre and his former staffer Arnold Panero.

4) He's got to check a couple family traps.

He understands urgency and will endeavor to get us a swift response, but I think we are talking at least a couple days.

Please advise with any flags/responses.

As you know, I am completely committed to doing everything that I can to help Hillary win the Democratic nomination and the presidential election. That is why I am sending you this e-mail with an idea for consideration.

It is my understanding that one of the issues that the campaign has been grappling with has been trying to find effective methods to connect Hillary to the concerns of the middle and working class. It struck me that one of the ways this might be accomplished is through short “person in the street” interviews of 45-60 seconds with every-day people.

Therefore, I commissioned a pilot spot to test and present this concept. I think it has come out rather well. Please click on the following link to preview the video: https://vimeo.com/139954714

As I envision it, this would be one in a series of spots featuring different targeted segments (e.g., working single mother, family with college age children, minority youth in search of career opportunities and education). Each spot would highlight the needs and concerns of a different demographic but close with the same ending as on the demo.

If you like the demo spot, and agree that the approach has merit, I would be pleased to support the development of this “person in the street” series.

Please let me know your thoughts. Thanks

Frank Islam

Document attached, 2016 highlights below:

MSNBC's Morning Joe: Show opened with coverage of Bernie Sander's presidential rally yesterday, the Democratic primary field, and HRC, then moved on to the Republican primary field. Later in the show, Joe interviewed Rand Paul about his father, his 2016 competition, ISIS, and the defense budget. Wrapped up with a roundtable discussion with Bill Kristol about Carly Fiorina and the 2016 Republican primary contest. Sanders is talking about minimum wage, big banks, etc. and HRC is saying she needs to pay the bills while making an "absurd amount of money, some would even say immoral." Todd points out Clintons have some tax forms they need to release and should just get it all out there now. Don't forget, panel points out, HRC is still the front-runner despite scrutiny and "she knows how to fight when she's on the mat."

Fox News' Fox and Friends: Brief report that George Stephanopoulos's donations to The Clinton Foundation could be affecting Ali Wentworth, his wife; Wentworth cancelled book tour appearances recently, which her publicist said was to better coordinate appearances with the book's release schedule. Interview with Chris Christie about the Patriot Act reauthorization; Christie said he agreed with the intelligence community on the Patriot Act; Christie said he had prosecuted terrorists; used footage of Mike Lee criticizing Christie; Christie said when people didn't know what they were talking about they often try to change the subject; hosts asked Christie about Snowden; Christie said Snowden was a criminal; Christie said he used the Patriot Act in New Jersey to prosecute; Christie said the Patriot Act was a security issue instead of a privacy issue; shifted into conversation about the fight against ISIS; Christie said Obama was not doing enough in the fight against ISIS; Christie pivoted twice when asked whether he would have attacked ISIS headquarters.

CNN's New Day: Pundits say Bernie Sanders will be tough on HRC for her record on trade, but will probably not attack her personally. Pundits also suggest that Martin O'Malley, in contrast to Sanders, might be the "hatchet man" to HRC, leveling more personal attacks. They went on to discuss how SC is important for HRC because it was here that she lost the African American vote to POTUS back in 2008. They also discuss that Fiorina will hold a press conference in front of HRC's hotel: a stunt meant to draw attention to the fact that she has been reluctant to talk to the media. John King jokes about merchandise, but makes some sarcastic and somewhat negative remarks about campaign merchandise, stating that campaigns are really selling merchandise to get your "name, address, and credit card information."

Happy New Year, Neera. I was delighted to hear from you and appreciate your taking the time to speak for Hillary and to write to me. You are the only "surrogate" out of dozens who as ever thanked me! You must have been brought up extremely well. If you have any influence over Hillary's campaign now, I wish that you would urge her to cut the attacks on Bernie. Her description of his single payer plan isn't accurate and makes her look very much on the defensive. She will always be the best qualified candidate for president whom we have ever had, and she doesn't need to resort to petty attacks. Just stick with her excellent and well-thought-out policy proposals!

Subject: John, will you sign this?

Dear John,

President Clinton's birthday is on Wednesday, and I need your help to make his birthday even more special.

I've known President Clinton a long time – back then, if you wanted to wish him a happy birthday, you'd have to drive down to Little Rock. Luckily, now we can make it easy for you to join in the celebration.

I am hoping we can gather 30,000 of the Foundation's closest supporters to share birthday wishes for him.

Will you sign President Clinton's birthday card and thank him for working every day to build a better future?

Wish President Clintoin a Happy Birthday! Sign the card.

I continue to be inspired by President Clinton's determination and vision. He has dedicated his life to impacting people around the world and, along with the Clinton Foundation, has transformed millions of lives:

- More than 85,000 farmers in Malawi, Rwanda, and Tanzania are benefiting from climate-smart agronomic training, higher yields, and increased market access.
- 9.9 million people in more than 70 countries now have access to lifesaving HIV/AIDS medicines through the Foundation's independent affiliated entity, the Clinton Health Access Initiative.
- 17 million children in more than 29,000 schools across all 50 states, Washington, D.C., and Puerto Rico now benefit from healthier food and more options for physical education.

And President Clinton is driving us to do more each and every day, with increased passion and energy, because he knows generating sustainable results requires action.

I hope you'll help us honor President Clinton and wish him a very happy birthday – sign our card now, and you can even include a personal note. I'll make sure he gets it!

Thank you for helping us celebrate President Clinton's vision and for your ongoing support of the Foundation.

Sincerely,

Donna E. Shalala
President
Clinton Foundation

Please click the link above to access your mobile boarding pass(es). To quickly retrieve and display your mobile boarding pass, you should save the image on your mobile device.

Once at the airport, show this mobile boarding pass:
- at Curbside where available, Self-Service Kiosks or the American Airlines counter if you are checking baggage,
- at the security checkpoint,
- during the boarding of your flight.

If you forget your cell phone or mobile device, or delete the link to your boarding pass by mistake, you can print a paper boarding pass at a Self Service Machine or American Airlines Ticket Counter.
For your convenience, a paper boarding pass has also been attached to this email. If you have access to a printer, you can print your paper boarding pass(es) before proceeding to the airport. The attached document is not a mobile boarding pass and will not be accepted at the security checkpoint if displayed from your mobile device.

Thank you for choosing American Airlines.

John-vision to learn is a program to provide access to eye doctors and -when needed - glasses to first-third and fifth graders, we are now opersting in 4 srtates just after 2.5 years. We have screened over 250 thousand kids and provided over 35 thousand pairs of glasses. Iowa is the latest state we have entered. We are beginning to operate in dubuque. We will have a formal inaugeration between jan 25 and jan 29. We would set the date consistent with hillary's schedule. In almost all cases we have a bus that visits a school with the appropriate medical personnel to screen the kids --qand for those needing glasses we provide them usually within two weeks, by the way we give them a choice of frames from about 100 examples. Its a perfect for hillaryb and the vtl program in iowa. I serve as co-chair with austin beutner(its his idea and initiative-he's the former publisher of the l.a times) and ann hollister is the executive director. Is there someone ann could talk with to see if this works? Please let me know and happy holidays to you and your family--mickey

John Heilemann, Mark Halperin, Mark McKinnon launching Showtime series

By Hadas Gold

Political consultant Mark McKinnon and Bloomberg Politics' John Heilemann and Mark Halperin are teaming up for a weekly half-hour documentary series that will run on pay-TV channel Showtime, the network announced on Wednesday.

The series, called "The Circus", will debut in January before the Iowa caucuses and run through election day. Filming has already begun, with McKinnon being spotted regularly on the campaign trail and at debates interviewing political players.

Showtime President David Nevins, who has known Halperin since high school, said the show will be in the same vein of their weekly sports series, "A Season With," which shows the behind the scenes drama around a sports team's season (this year's subject is the Notre Dame Fighting Irish).

"I want the nitty gritty of how campaigns works. I want access to Hillary Clinton, Ted Cruz and Donald Trump, but I also want the people behind the candidates," Nevins said in an interview.

The trio approached Showtime about a documentary series about four months ago, and Nevins said he was immediately interested in the prospect of a real time documentary series as the election unfolded, instead of waiting until after election day. The show is being done with Bloomberg's blessing, though it is using completely separate production crews from Halperin and Heilemann's daily show "With All Due Respect," which is now also being broadcast on MSNBC.

"We can develop characters like any good story. You'll develop characters and you'll stay with them. We'll find a compelling 23 year-old kid who dropped out of college to follow Marco Rubio on the road, we'll stay with that kid," Nevins said. "Like any great television show the audience identifies with characters and follows them."

This is the block updated from our conversation Saturday. A few things:

it sounds like getting a picture of taking the girls to school would involve a waiver. What is a 2nd option for a photo that day?

Do we have a podium sign with the seal being printed somewhere?

We have locked a ballroom at the Hyatt for avails. We are trying to lock an additional ballroom for the meeting followed by avail for Friday.

We are close to having office space locked for Wed-Friday. Adam Hitchcock will update later today. Hopefully Ariel Cap which is one block from our HQ and one block from Hyatt.

We should get this to BO if no one has issues.

ORGANIZING FOR ACTION

Hundreds of thousands of people have signed OFA's petition calling for a fair hearing for the next Supreme Court nominee -- be one of them:

ADD MY NAME

John --

The Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee have promised not to hold a single hearing on President Obama's Supreme Court nominee. Some of them have said they wouldn't even open their office door to meet him or her.

This kind of hard-headed contempt for their duties as senators has gone way too far.

We deserve a Supreme Court that works, not one with an empty seat for more than a year.

Demand a fair hearing and a timely vote on President Obama's Supreme Court nominee -- sign OFA's petition.

We're not going to take this lying down -- the issues the Supreme Court is about to consider are too important: Women's health care and worker's rights, climate change, and immigration laws will all be before the Court in the next year. We can't let them get away with shutting it down with the same extreme politics that shut down the government in 2013.

Join OFA in calling for a fair hearing and timely vote on President Obama's Supreme Court nominee:

John, they're hoping we're not paying attention. Let's prove them wrong.

Statement by AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka on Senate Cloture Vote on Health Care Bill
November 21, 2009

The Senate vote to open up debate on the Patient Protection and Affordable Health Care Act marks a critical and historic milestone in the march toward genuine health care reform. With Sen. Majority Leader Harry Reid's sure leadership, Democrats signaled that they are united and serious about solving the health care problems that torment working families daily. Republicans, sadly, showed that they were not even willing to let the debate over reform go forward.

Senators will now have the opportunity to debate specifics and come up with the best health care law for America. They have a ways to go.

The Senate bill's strong cost cutting measures go further than any previous legislation. But the bill must be improved in important areas. The employer responsibility provision should be expanded to cover all employers. And any plan to tax working families' benefits should be eliminated -- taxes on the middle class are the wrong way to pay for health care.

We look forward to working with the Senate to fulfill the promise of quality, affordable health care that our country deserves.

The Note: Trump Gone Wild

November, 13, 2015 9:39 AM
By MICHAEL FALCONE

NOTABLES

--'HOW STUPID ARE THE PEOPLE OF IOWA TO BELIEVE THIS CRAP': On a contentious day in the GOP race, frontrunner Donald Trump didn't shy away from calling out his rival "in second place" Ben Carson , asking the 1,500 Iowans in the crowd today about Carson's "pathological stories" in his book and saying "How stupid are the people of Iowa to believe this crap?" Trump focused on a story from Carson's books where he writes about stabbing someone with a knife, ABC's JOHN SANTUCCI and JOSH HASKELL note. "It hit the belt. And the knife broke. Give me a break," Trump told the crowd at Iowa Central Community College. Trump then stepped away from the podium and demonstrated what Carson stabbing a friend in the belt would look like. "He hit the belt buckle? Anybody with a knife wanna try it on me? Believe me it ain't gonna work," Trump said. http://abcn.ws/1MMT4v9

--NOTED: After attacking the people of Iowa for supporting Carson, Trump said he loves the people here, noting, "I think I'm going to buy a farm and move here." http://abcn.ws/1MMT4v9

--CARSON SLAMS TRUMP ON DEPORTATIONS: In an interview with the Washington Examiner after his rally at Liberty University yesterday, Ben Carson slammed Trump's deportation plan saying the plan will "hurt" the candidate in the long run. "I think they hurt Donald Trump in the long run," Carson said of Trump's plan. "I think there are enough people who know that there are others in the race that are very reasonable. I don't think he necessarily is the representation of the Republican Party -- far from it." According to ABC's KATHERINE FAULDERS, Donald Trump fired back at Carson Thursday on Twitter, said Carson was weak on immigration and likes amnesty and a pathway to citizenship. @realDonaldTrump: Wow, pres. candidate Ben Carson, who is very weak on illegal Immigration, just said he likes amnesty and a pathway to citizenship.

--ANALYSIS -- ABC's RICK KLEIN: Donald Trump knows better than most, if not all, the value of performance art in the act of running for president. Which is just one of many reasons that Trump's Thursday night rant, aimed at all of his rivals and particularly Dr. Ben Carson, was memorable and remarkable. Trump has lamented his situation -- that people expect him to say something new, and maybe outrageous, every time he goes out there. There's no teleprompter technology yet known that would dictate the pantomime-stabbing, much less the incredulous facial expressions and the invitation for someone to get on the stage and try stabbing him. The Trump-Carson feud, now fully engaged, could get bloody, maybe even literally -- good news for the dozen or so candidates now fighting for only the half of the GOP electorate available to them. Trump's questions late Thursday were rhetorical and somehow still critical: "How stupid are the people of Iowa? How stupid are the people of this country to believe this crap?"

IN THE NOTE'S INBOX

CLINTON FLAUNTS CAMPAIGN SUPPORT FROM SANDERS' HOME STATE: On the eve of the second Democratic presidential debate, the Clinton campaign has launched two more of its State Leadership Councils: One in Missouri and one in Vermont -- the home state of Sen. Bernie Sanders, ABC's LIZ KREUTZ notes. Included in the Vermont council are 25 prominent local supporters such as Senator Patrick Leahy, Governor Peter Shumlin, former Governor Howard Dean and former Governor

Madeleine Kunin. No doubt, a bit of a slap in the face for her opponent.

TODAY ON THE TRAIL with ABC's SHUSHANNAH WALSHE: It's a busy Florida day on the trail as most of all the GOP candidates are in Orlando for the Republican Party of Florida's Sunshine Summit. It's an all-day "cattle call" featuring Floridian Marco Rubio first kicking it off at 11:30AM followed by Ted Cruz, Lindsey Graham, Mike Huckabee (who will avail afterwards) Jeb Bush, and the day ends with rivals Donald Trump at 5:30pm and Ben Carson at 6:30pm. Chris Christie and Carly Fiorina won't be at the summit in Orlando and are instead in Iowa. John Kasich and Rand Paul are also not in Orlando and are instead in New Hampshire.

NEW POLL -- CLINTON SWEEPS IN DEMOCRATIC POPULARITY BUT FACES CHALLENGES OUTSIDE THE PARTY. Hillary Clinton easily leads Bernie Sanders in basic popularity within their political party -- but among Americans overall, a bare majority in the latest ABC News/Washington Post poll see the Democratic frontrunner unfavorably, ABC's GREGORY HOLYK notes. Clinton's viewed favorably by a vast 83 percent of Democrats. Outside of the embrace of her own party, though, she faces challenges, including more strongly negative than strongly positive views and weakness among whites. Her popularity also is marked by a broad gender gap. Fifty-one percent of Americans overall see her negatively, 46 percent positively -- the second time in three polls since August that she's been viewed unfavorably by more than half the public, and only the third time this has happened in nearly 50 ABC/Post polls back to 1992. Moreover, 38 percent in this poll, produced for ABC by Langer Research Associates, view her "strongly" unfavorably, vs. 23 percent strongly favorably. And among registered voters, 53 percent see Clinton unfavorably. https://bitly.com/shorten/

OBAMA SAYS DONALD TRUMP'S IMMIGRATION PLAN IS UNREALISTIC. Donald Trump's proposal to use a "deportation force" to deport millions of undocumented immigrants is unrealistic, President Obama said in an exclusive interview Thursday with ABC's GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS. "The notion that we're gonna deport 11, 12 million people from this country -- first of all, I have no idea where Mr. Trump thinks the money's gonna come from. It would cost us hundreds of billions of dollars to execute that," the president told Stephanopoulos in an interview at the White House. "Imagine the images on the screen flashed around the world as we were dragging parents away from their children, and putting them in what, detention centers, and then systematically sending them out," the president said. "Nobody thinks that that is realistic. But more importantly, that's not who we are as Americans." Asked why he thinks some Americans are attracted to Trump's mass deportation plan, the president said "there has always been a strain of anti-immigrant sentiment in America -- ironically from folks who themselves two generations back or even one generation back were immigrants themselves." ABC's ARLETTE SAENZ has more. http://abcn.ws/1lmdoNS

MARCO RUBIO, TED CRUZ SPAR OVER WHO'S TOUGHER ON ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION. From Donald Trump's call for a "deportation force" to Sens. Marco Rubio and Ted Cruz sparring over their immigration records, the war over who is tougher on illegal immigration is raging in the GOP presidential field. At a campaign stop in Hilton Head, South Carolina, Thursday, Sen. Rubio responded to Trump's call that he would create a deportation force similar to what Dwight Eisenhower used in the 1950s to deport a million undocumented immigrants. "There are deportations in America now and there are people that are going to have to be deported. Criminals will be deported," Rubio said. "People that have not been here long enough will be deported. We're going to enforce our immigration laws. That being said, I don't think it's reasonable to say you're gonna round up and deport 11 million people." During his speech to the South Carolina Chamber of Commerce, Rubio went further in discussing how he might handle the issue of illegal immigration. ABC's INES DE LA CUETARA and JESSICA HOPPER report Rubio also defended against claims that he is pro-amnesty and offered a jab at his rival in the presidential race, Texas Sen. Ted Cruz. http://abcn.ws/1QyJcLp

DONALD TRUMP CALLS MIZZOU PROTESTERS 'DISGUSTING. Real estate mogul and presidential candidate Donald Trump weighed in Thursday on the protests at the University of Missouri over racial incidents. "I think it's disgusting," Trump said in an interview with the Fox Business Network. Some Mizzou students have complained for months of racial slurs. Earlier this week,

University System President Tim Wolfe resigned and R. Bowen Loftin, chancellor of the main campus in Columbia, said he would step down at the end of the year, ABC's PAOLA CHAVEZ notes. "I think the two people that resigned are weak, ineffective people," Trump said. "I think that when they resigned, they set something in motion that's gonna be a disaster for the next long period of time." http://abcn.ws/1WPKZk4

CHRIS CHRISTIE EXPLAINS WHY GOP VOTERS ARE SUPPORTING TRUMP. Asked to explain the appeal of Donald Trump, Chris Christie gave an animated response Thursday by actually imitating the Donald and told the story of the last time Mary Pat and he went out to dinner with Trump, describing the experience as "exhausting." Before breaking into his mini-skit, Christie first offered a straightforward explanation for Trump's appeal: "Because people are angered and disgusted with government in Washington DC, that's why." ABC'S JORDYN PHELPS reports, he then added the disclaimer that he and Mary Pat have been friends with Trump for 15 years and described him as "a generous guy, and a nice guy." He then told the story of the last time he and Mary Pat went out to dinner with Trump and his wife, describing the experience as exhausting -- because Trump never stops talking, and about himself no less. http://abcn.ws/1iXQFWw

Chris can share the details with you tomorrow, but we agree that it would not be worth pushing for Benjamin Rhodes to receive interim status. We can communicate with Susan and Sarah generally that Benjamin wasn't given interim status, and either Chris or I can communicate directly with Benjamin. For your information, out of the approximately 187 people who we have moved through the process Benjamin was the only person declined interim status. The young lawyer Kate Shaw who is coordinating the process for us has done a great job.

Hi John,

Following up on our conversaton at the Winter Meeting, I am writing on behalf of CGI to invite you to join a small group of advisors we are forming.

As I mentioned, now that Secretary Clinton has stepped down from office, CGI is re-merging into the Clinton Foundation as a legal matter. Accordingly, while there is no longer the need for a board of directors to exercise fiduciary duties, I and others at CGI found it useful during the term of our existence as a separate entity to have a group of knowledgeable and trusted directors (Chelsea Clinton, Bruce Lindsey, Doug Band, Eric Nonacs and me) to provide advice and guidance regarding the strategic direction of CGI. As a result, that group will continue to be involved, and we would like to expand it with a few additional friends of CGI who know us well, including you.

Our first meeting of the expanded group will occur on Wednesday, March 13th, at the new offices of CGI (Time & Life Building, 42nd floor, 1271 Avenue of the Americas), although the precise time is uncertain, given movement in President Clinton's schedule that day. We expect to convene three meetings per year.

Please let me know whether you would be interested and able to join us.

Best regards,

Bob

Subject: A quick update

Dear John:

I'm a big believer in transparency and accountability, so here's a quick update from Washington.

First, the biggest news is that the nomination of Judge Sonia Sotomayor to the Supreme Court sailed through the Judiciary Committee last month, 13-6. She is widely expected to earn confirmation from the full Senate later this week, and I for one, couldn't be prouder to cast my vote for the first Latina Supreme Court Justice in our nation's history.

Next, I have been working hard to repeal the military's "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy and we've just had an important breakthrough. Senator Carl Levin, Chairman of the Armed Services Committee, has agreed to hold the first Senate hearings about repealing DADT.

This is a critical milestone, because it's our best chance to show the Senate the real, human cost of this flawed policy. Too many of our bravest, most heroic men and women are unable to serve their country. It's not right.

To prepare for these hearings, I have already recruited 8,871 grassroots activists willing to stand up and show this country that it's time to end DADT. It's not too late for you to join us.

Click here to help end "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

I have also been fighting to make autism treatment more affordable and available for families in the Armed Forces. My new bill would require the military's health insurance program to cover the full cost of autism treatment for service members' children. Right now, it only pays about half of the typical monthly cost.

This time around, Senate Republicans blocked my amendment to the Senate's Defense authorization bill, but I'm not about to give up on the families struggling to cope with the effects of autism. We will keep fighting.

Finally, the fight for healthier school lunches and healthier kids goes on.

Over the past forty years, child obesity has skyrocketed - increasing by 150 percent among 2 to 5 year olds and 400 percent among children 6 to 11 years old.

That's why I recently introduced a plan to ban trans fats in schools, reduce the amount of junk food that is available on school grounds, improve the nutritional content of meals served in school, and create more exercise opportunities for students.

As a mom, it just makes sense to me that we need to replace unhealthy choices in our schools with healthy options if we're going to do something about the obesity issue. I'm proud to say that The New York Times , Newsday , and other media around the state have all taken notice of the work we're doing.

That's the update from DC. Thank you again for all of your continued support.

Kirsten

Subject: Annual Meeting Dates for 2012

I hope everyone had a wonderful Thanksgiving.

Following our last exchange about what to do, if anything, in light of the conflict between Yom Kippur and the typical Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday timing of the 2012 Annual Meeting, we had approximately 15 conversations with various friendly members -- Jewish, non-Jewish, corporate, individual, New York based and non-New York based -- seeking their advice. Based on this input, our recommendation is to begin the Annual Meeting on Sunday at midday and conclude it late afternoon on Tuesday, before sundown. This is logistically feasible, given conversations with the Sheraton and Five Currents. It would completely avoid any overlap between our meeting and the holiday, and Sandy Berger believes we would be able to attract heads of state on Monday and Tuesday. The trade-offs are increased labor costs due to weekend overtime and the loss of one evening event (unless we were to choose to hold an event on Tuesday evening). Among the three traditional evening events -- the Clinton Global Citizen Awards ceremony, sponsor dinners on various topics and MoMA -- we would propose eliminating MoMa. This would result in savings of approximately $300,000 to offset increased weekend labor costs.

Chelsea, please review this new recommendation with your father and let us know your thoughts.

Best,

Bob

We are doing research to be able to field a mid-January poll about McCain if we need. And, we are going deeper on Romney to strengthen our attacks on him.

We are trying to schedule a call for Monday with our update.

Be a Voice to Decide The Future of the Supreme Court

The next President of the United States will change the future of the Supreme Court for generations. By the middle of the next President's term, there will be four Supreme Court justices in their 80s.

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsberg born March 15, 1933.
Justice Antonin Scalia born March 11, 1936
Justice Anthony Kennedy born July 23, 1936
Justice Stephen Breyer born August 15, 1938

If Hillary Clinton is elected President in 2016, and is able to replace Ginsberg, Breyer, and either Kennedy or Scalia, she will lock in a very young liberal court for many decades to come.

This new Court would surely cement the Roe v. Wade decision and reverse this Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United which allows big corporations and billionaires to lurk in the shadows, and influence legislation by allowing for limitless political contributions.

If you have no other political agenda but to protect our civil liberties, like a woman's right to choose, or if you believe that we should not allow big corporations and billionaires to have limitless influence on our government, then GIVE NOW.

MAKE YOUR VOICE HEARD.

Hillary Clinton will not have the Republican fundraising machine which will include the loud voices and interests of large corporations and billionaires such as the Koch brothers.

Her voice must be an accumulation of all of our voices. Her campaign is about creating a large tent for all to participate and be heard.

Since the Supreme Court decided Citizens United, the only way an individual has a voice is by donating money.
This is sad and to some, unseemly, but it is reality.

We must change this for future generations or face a civil justice and legislative system that works only for the powerful and wealthy and not FOR THE PEOPLE.

We must support Hillary to ensure that we have a Supreme Court that protects our civil liberties.

Early donations allow for early organizational strength across the country.
This may be our best advantage.
Let's capitalize on this opportunity.

Let's Unite for a Strong Voice.

Please Donate Now

Cheryl, John,

Thanks for today.
It was really great to hear your feedback in advance of next week.

We have some work to do and some time to do it.

Chief areas of focus are;

1. Better set up and sell in the It's Our Time line with both strengths and proactive addressing of vulnerabilities.

2. More robust demonstration of announcement phase with how we'll completely dominate the landscape with the meaning of It's Our Time.

3. Further build out of Humanizing Hillary section with more films and avenues to do so.

4. Tightening of strategic set up.

5. Parsing of extra work that muddies decision making at this stage.

6. Better way-finding throughout the presentation to show how and where in the journey the work fits in.

Here is the link to what you saw today. Complete with the films of you want to watch them again. Cheryl, I'm hoping Joanne can print you a copy for your added feedback. We'll take it all.

Subject: Congressional Investigations: Matt Greer paper topic

Judge Leon & Professor Podesta,

For my paper topic, I'd like to take on "congressional access to classified Executive branch legal opinions."

My plan is to take a separation of powers-type approach to examining the topic. Basically, I want to look at how the independent legal interpretations (especially constitutional ones) of the two branches affect inter-branch disputes and how congressional access to Executive branch reasoning/opinions would affect their relationship/how courts might decide separation of powers cases. I might use one or two "hot" issues to help illustrate the argument (Zivitovsky, Bond, Exec. Action on immigration, or others if I limit to classified opinions).

Please let me know if you have any questions or concerns. See you in class tomorrow.

Respectfully,
Matt

Subject: May 15th Political Update

The twenty-first century has been defined by change. The change has been primarily driven by economic, technological and demographic forces, but it's also more than that. Americans' basic notions about their security – whether it's making enough money to provide for a family or keeping them safe from terrorism – have been fundamentally altered by their experiences since 2000.

At a time when Americans are looking for solutions and a way forward, their political and governmental institutions have shown that they're ill-equipped to meet the demands of this new century. As a consequence, Americans' faith in their government has been greatly shaken. The first section in the attached election update shows just how disillusioned and disaffected voters are feeling 18 months before next year's elections.

Section two illustrates how divided we are as a country, as well as the depth of dissatisfaction toward the two major political parties.

Since elections tend to be lagging indicators of the direction of the country, i.e., they allow us to make better sense of our past, the outcome of the next presidential election will likely reflect the same political, demographic and geographic divisions that have defined our politics since the beginning of the 1990's. Section three highlights just how hardened these divisions have become.

The next 18 months are likely to be volatile and unpredictable. Even so, it will be important to keep a close eye on the same handful of states that have been decisive in the last four presidential elections.

RE: Economic Development in the National Energy Council

Congratulations Carol on your new post. We cannot imagine anyone better suited to this essential task. We are so proud and excited. On behalf of all of our colleagues at American Progress, we wish you great success. We also thank you for your leadership on CAP's Board and your commitment to CAP during the institution's formative period. While we will miss you there, we look forward to working with you in your new role.

We write here to share an observation that might inform how you assemble the team that works with you. To be clear, we are not arguing for any particular candidates. We simply want to urge that you keep the skills and interests we suggest in mind as you build your team. We stand ready to work with whomever you select, but we believe our capacity to advance the shared agenda will be enhanced if we can interact with and you bring on board "economic development" staff with a focus on (and expertise in) the housing and community development, workforce, and infrastructure programs that will be needed to coordinate the retrofitting and reconstruction of our built environment, create green jobs, and move the foundations of our economy towards a low-carbon future.

We know you share our conviction that the task at hand is not simply environmental in nature, but involves a dramatic restructuring of the economy. You know well that buildings and housing represents 40 percent of our energy use and a comparable portion of global warming emissions. As a result, we need a national strategy to retrofit our existing building stock. With an aging workforce in the energy sector and proposals for a fivefold increase in building retrofits, we also need a strategy to address workforce development. And with a rising urgency to rebuild our transportation and electrical grid infrastructure to support low carbon energy, we need to confront global warming as both urban and infrastructure policy. Finally, we know you believe that the nation's green economic agenda can ensure that energy solutions lift all boats—especially those of the most marginalized communities—and invest in strong urban fabrics and quality jobs. A positive program of investing in clean energy can offer pathways out of poverty, skills training, and career ladders in high-paying trades and the industries of the future -- all desperately needed in our crippled economy.

We write because our prior and recent experiences suggest that it will require a single-minded and dedicated staff at the White House focused on this economic transformation to have a shot at success. As you may know, each of us served in both cabinet agency and White House staff roles in the past. We are keenly aware of how the challenges and day to day realities of agency offices make it difficult to wake up "thinking green." We are greatly excited about the talented cabinet that President-elect Obama has assembled and we expect similarly progressive and committed subcabinet picks. We know that virtually all of them share your interest in green transformation. But the enormity of the financial, policy, and management challenges and the great pressures of extant constituencies at the key agencies will make it difficult for them to pursue the energy transformation agenda with the intensity required.

Let us use HUD as one example. CAP recently hosted a meeting of advocates and experts on how to speed energy efficiency changes for the HUD-assisted and insured housing stock. The Secretary-designate is a friend, who is an expert in policy and shares our commitment to this goal. Yet we all were deeply chastened as we considered the agency's limitations, disfunction, and challenges. Even new dedicated political staff with energy transformation as their focus will find this daunting. They will need strong support and constant pressure from the White House to achieve the progress required.

Of course, you need some on your team seeped in the global climate change policy, emissions trading systems, and the science and technology of climate change, the environment, and energy. However, for this economic development transformation White House staff also must be expert. To be successful, you cannot merely coordinate agency efforts into a larger strategy or even demand policy responsiveness to the President's goals. Your team must initiate and drive policy development. While the President's commitment to this project is the most important ingredient, the job also requires Energy Council staff familiar with the capacities of the Departments of Housing and Urban Development, Energy, Labor, Transportation, Education, EPA and Interior – all of whom have relevant programs in their existing portfolios. Ideally too they know finance and have experience in shaping public/private partnership, as the government is leader and catalyst but the change must be society-wide. Such a staff would provide a point of entry and engagement for the mayors, community-based organizations, labor, civil rights groups, regulators, and other stakeholders involved with housing, urban, and infrastructure, and workforce issues, currently looking for ways to engage with the discussions around energy, climate and jobs.

Have no doubt that American Progress stands ready to engage, support, and work closely with each and every member of your team. We are very excited about the prospects for change and look forward to doing all that we can from outside government to provide ideas, analysis, and advocacy. Please do not hesitate to tell us how we can help.

Want to flag for this group that HRC is in Nevada tomorrow and hope to have a clear shot at making news so it would be great if the letter did indeed get out today.

Also I am married to Jim Lyons, but think you are talking about the other Jim Lyons.

Responding to all on this. I was not on the call this morning, but I lean away from a bright line rule here. It seems odd to say that someone who represents Alberta, Canada can't give, but a lobbyist for Phillip Morris can. Just as we vet lobbyists case by case, I would do the same with FARA. While this may lead to a large number of FARA registrants being denied, it would not be a flat our ban. A total ban feels arbitrary and will engender the same eye-rolling and ill will that it did for Obama.

We're consistently flagging more FARA registrants daily. In terms of # - we're at 27 out of 370 prospective bundlers - but to Jesse's question - that does not represent the costs of how much these folks would likely raise.

If we were looking at these folks below on a case by case basis, I'd want to specifically raise: Tony Podesta (Iraq, Azerbaijan, Egypt), Ben Barnes (Libya), John Merrigan (UAE), Wyeth Weidman (Libya), and Mike Driver (UAE connections)

I think we can definitely get the first answered. I will make sure to flag.
The second is a good question I will raise. The rationale section starts with groups which I think is really important. The first survey is really meant to be a lay of the land--what are people's fav/unfavs, right track/ wrong track, initial head to head, etc. Very basic. Then the online panel is supposed to provide some qualitative to underpin that. We also have the qualitative Garin already did. But that may not be the right way to go and I'll ask the pollsters about that. Like I said, I'm certain the plan will change--I am many things, but a pollster is not one!

So I think she has the capacity and creativity to drive the brand development and strategy from inception to execution. I imagine she would rely on the data that is being collected through the polling and focus groups you outline but equally as important, would likely have questions she might suggest specifically be included in the process. That's why I'm not sure she is an advisor in the sense of opining on things as they occur but instead an actual partner with the team in defining and shaping what information is needed and then how to synthesize it for the purposes at hand.

This may make more sense once you meet her and have a thoughtful conversation about her strenghts and talents. Then i think her active engagement can be efficient and productive for the activity you have outlined. Should we arrange a time for you to meet her or at least connect with her by telephone?

best.

John, I would (strongly) suggest HRC be far more forceful offering a reform agenda ASAP, including saying that before any fast track trade legislation is passed major information should be declassified and the public should be informed, as lobbyists are now. Not take a position on the agreement itself but definitely take a position on disclosure before fast track.

I have been vigorously criticizing the Shweizer book, but I absolutely believe the Clintons have a money problem, and they are not fully aware of the danger of this. The problem is not that she is "caught" doing anything unethical or illegal, but that a) Republican Congressional hearings will widen and a long term perjury trap and endless cycles of news stories, and b) at some point the public may not want to spend the next 18 months and then 4 years talking about Clinton issues and may simply want to move on.

The net net of everything HRC has done since leaving the State Department is that her trust numbers have fallen dramatically. Frankly it is inexcusable that all foreign donations were stopped months ago and that some continue today. Except for her Citizens United position that I publicly and loudly applauded, she has said virtually nothing of consequence and inspiration for two years which has created a gigantic news void that has been filled by stories about her tactics, her money, her consultants and her maneuvers and on current course I see nothing that will change that.

She needs to be bold, pro-active and reformist and make hard decisions on matters such as ending ALL foreign donations to the foundation NOW, forcefully and clearly offering reformist ideas, and not play a four corner offense stalling and avoiding bold positions thinking her position is safe----which I believe it is not.

My worst concern is that I do not believe the Clintons are in sync with the public mood on why her trust numbers have fallen so dramatically.

The views I express here represent the overwhelming majority of private views of Democrats I know but I am not convinced they have expressed this to her, as directly as I am expressing this here.....

As you may know Terry Tamminen is organizing "The Governors' climate summit" for Nov 18-19 in LA. He appears to have rounded up some interesting folks. US governors, China, India folks. See below

This is what Terry is asking for

We suggest that the Senator could participate on either the 18th or 19th in any of the following ways, pending his busy schedule:

- attend in person and address the Summit;
- address the Summit live via satellite;
- provide a brief videotaped message of support;
- send an official representative to address the Summit.

I recommended that sooner rather than later we have to set Terry's expectations accordingly. I f the ultimate decision is to have OB more "out" there perhaps a video tape that includes statement on Posnan/post Kyoto could make sense. The event will obviously provide an opportunity to demonstrate "bi-partisanship" on the issue.

Thoughts?

RE: Governors' Global Climate Summit (November 18-19 in Los Angeles)
cc Mary Nichols; Dan Carol

At the suggestion of Dan Carol, I have drafted this short summary of an opportunity for Senator Obama to participate in an important global climate summit. We hope you will help us recommend Senator Obama's participation in the event (I mentioned the opportunity to him briefly in July).

BACKGROUND
33 states have now drafted climate action plans; 12 have passed them into law; 25 are committed to participate in one of three regional cap-trade systems. Governors of both parties from these states are working together to synchronize their actions and influence any future federal climate program in constructive ways.

As a part of that effort, many of them met at Yale last April to publicize these efforts; build more bi-partisan momentum for state actions; and 24 of them signed a Declaration to the federal government with recommendations for a federal plan that builds on this progress (they were also joined by 4 Canadian provinces that are partnering with the regional cap-trade systems).

THE GOVERNORS' GLOBAL CLIMATE SUMMIT

These "climate leadership" states are now co-hosting a Summit on November 18-19 in Los Angeles to:

- publicize further state progress on reducing GHGs;
- engage Governors and Premiers from states and provinces of other nations that are doing likewise;
- share best practices and specific commitments for additional efforts going forward;
- demonstrate to international negotiators that the actual progress and commitments at the sub-national level - - especially in countries like the US, China, Brazil, and Canada - - justify a progressive and comprehensive post-Kyoto climate agreement in Copenhagen in 2009.

Participants will include

- at least 6 Governors from these leadership states plus official representatives from 20 others.
- 3 Canadian Premiers
- 7 Governors and Premiers from states/provinces in Australia, Indonesia, Mexico, and Brazil
- 2 Chief Ministers (equivalent to Governors) from states of India
- EU senior representative
- UN senior representative (Yvo de Boer is sending his deputy Richard Kinley to speak and "bless" this effort as a valuable asset to the Poznan/Copenhagen work)
- China - - most notably, NDRC Vice Chairman Xie Zhenhua has met personally with our team twice over the past 3 months in Beijing (including once with Frank Loy in attendance) and is using this Summit as an opportunity to publicize China's efforts to improve energy efficiency and reduce GHGs to date; and to announce its intention to reach a deal at Copenhagen, working closely with the US to achieve that. Xie is sending a very senior delegation from the central government along with provincial leaders to participate. He has asked us CONFIDENTIALLY to use the Summit agreements as the basis for drafting a proposed MOU between the US and China that would engage the new Administration in Washington (we should discuss this opportunity separately).
- 600+ delegates from business, academia, and government, many of whom will work on specific sector agreements and information-sharing at the Summit.

A website with more information has been established at www.governorsglobalclimatesummit.org

OPPORTUNITY FOR SENATOR OBAMA

This Summit provides the Senator with an opportunity to

- highlight his commitment to address this global issue;
- re-establish US leadership on this issue;
- include these climate leadership US Governors in that effort and build on their commitments and successes to date;
- engage China and other nations in this effort.

We suggest that the Senator could participate on either the 18th or 19th in any of the following ways, pending his busy schedule:

- attend in person and address the Summit;
- address the Summit live via satellite;
- provide a brief videotaped message of support;
- send an official representative to address the Summit.

Please let me know if you need further information to help recommend this to the Senator and his team. Mary Nichols will be participating in the Summit and can also provide additional background.

Thank you

Subject:	My new book

Dear friends,

For the sake of our country and world, thank goodness Barack Obama won the election. Thanks to all of you for your hard work in making it happen.

There are so many reasons to be happy about this, but I actually have an extra one. I have a book scheduled to be released to bookstores on January 14th, less than a week before the inauguration, that talks about the themes of the Obama campaign being the themes of historic progressivism, and predicting that we are headed into a new progressive era. Given that the book was actually written this spring and summer, it sure makes marketing it easier now that Obama has won.

The book is entitled The Progressive Revolution: How the Best In America Came To Be . It is about the history of the American political debate between progressives and conservatives dating back to 1776, and describes how our side won that debate, America moved forward- and when their side won, the country got messed up.

I have succeeded in getting great blurbs on the back from several wonderful friends, including Paul Begala, Donna Brazile, David Brock, Wes Boyd, Tom Daschle, Arianna Huffington, and David Sirota. I've also got a bunch of friendly organizations willing to send something out to their e-mail lists, and a bunch of friendly bloggers to help as well. The final piece of the marketing package is to get friends of mine (hint, hint) to co-sponsor book parties for me in cities around the country, so I'm sending this request around to friends of mine I'm targeting to see if they would be willing to co-host a party in their town. My plan would be to start traveling around the country doing these parties in the week after the Inaugural is over through March.

Here's the downside: given that I am helping with the transition, and want to do quite a few parties, whichever folks agreed to help will need to plan this without a ton of logistical support from me or my staff in D.C. We will e-mail to our friends in your town, but won't be able to spend a lot of time on the organizing end, so whoever agrees to help in a given place will be large and in charge.

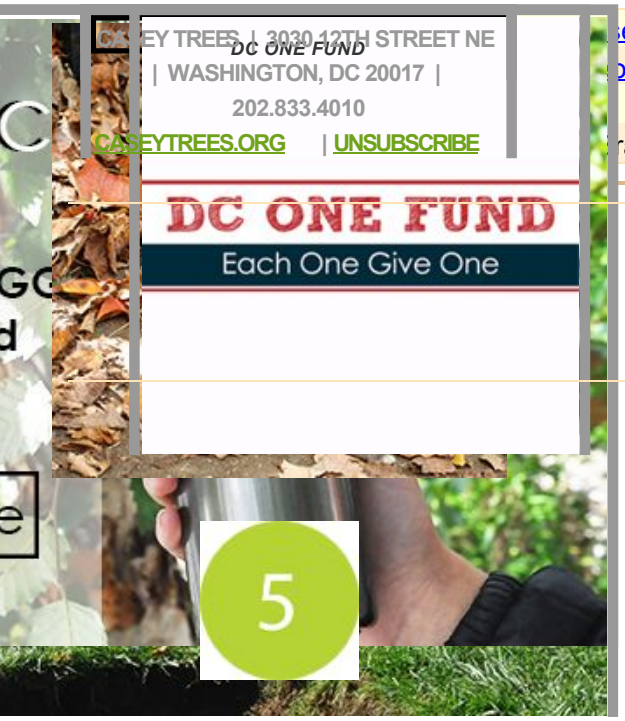

E-mail me back if you are willing to help. I would, of course, understand if you can't, but would be forever grateful if you can.

Warm regards,
Mike

I'm not sure if you check this email, but it's the only one I could find online.
I went to school with Gabe at Murch, and recently saw your twitter post about UFO disclosure. I have been researching this phenomenon for a little over a decade. I am familiar with Dr. Greer as well as John Mack's work on abduction, Budd Hopkins, Stanton Friedman, David Jacobs, the list goes on and on!
Anyway, I've been meaning to reach out since reading Leslie Kean's book. I'm sure we share some similar frustrations at a lack of disclosure of perhaps the most important thing humanity has ever experienced. If there is anything I can do to help, in any way, please let me know. There aren't many legitimate people out there speaking on this topic. Especially people who have held your positions in government. Is disclosure on the horizon? Can we make it happen under Hillary? We cant let the military corporations block disclosure any longer!
Thanks for your time,
Juan

Hillary,
I've been thinking about this a lot since our last foreign policy meeting. I'm worried that the hostility toward Obama among donors who buy Bibi's line about his commitment to Israel could cause you to run away from his (and your) overall foreign policy record, which would be a big mistake in the same way that it will squeeze you into a corner that you do not need to be in and prevents you from making a bold case for your success as Secretary of State.

Let's assume a deal with Iran gets done. Then, as I write here, http://www.project-syndicate.org/commentary/obama-foreign-policy-record-by-anne-marie-slaughter-2015-04, Obama will have a foreign policy legacy to be proud of — doing exactly what he said he would do when he came in by opening up relations with Myanmar, Cuba, and Iran and thereby helping to to transform US relations with three distinct regions. These are diplomatic achievements rather than military, and economic as much as political. George W. Bush isolated us in the world; Barack Obama reconnected us in ways that allow us to advance peace and prosperity, etc. There's still a gaping hole in terms of your kind of leadership, but he kept his eyes on the prize and did things that mattered. And you did one of those with him (Myanmar) and laid the indispensable groundwork for the other two.

Finally, the entire "Obama doesn't care about Israel" narrative shifts attention from the real issue with Israel, which is that this government is missing one of the greatest opportunities in Israel's history to move from pariah state to political broker and economic anchor of the Middle East. I made that case in a few short paragraphs in the New York Times Up for Debate (reprinted below) yesterday; Fareed's column this week makes almost exactly the same case. It's not even about what is right for the Palestinians; it is about what Israel could be and do if it could just move to the next phase of its history rather than remaining mired in insecurity and hostility of its past.

This didn't seem like Mother's Day reading, so wanted to get it off today!
Best,
AM

Israel's Rightward Shift Helps Make It Its Own

Worst Enemy

It is a difficult and immensely frustrating time to be a friend of Israel. Never in Israel's history would peace with the Palestinians yield such rich and enduring dividends, and never since the peace process began has the Israeli government been so resolutely opposed even to serious negotiations.

Real peace could allow Israel to form political, military and economic alliances to make it a regional power broker and let Palestinians thrive.

The center of the Middle East – Iraq and Syria – is disintegrating, mixing virulent and horrifically violent religious fanaticism with civil war and criminal and corrupt governments. But that conflagration has created a new set of actual and potential alignments. Saudi Arabia and the Gulf States are openly willing to work closely with Israel – against Assad, and in the Saudi case, against Iran. But Turkey and Iran would be willing to work with Israel – drawing on its superlative intelligence and military capabilities – against ISIS. And Egypt under President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi is once again willing to work with Israel against Hamas.

With a Palestinian peace that included normalizing relations with all Arab countries, as the Arab Peace Initiative of 2002 and 2007 proposed, Israel could move from pariah state to power broker overnight.

On the economic front, the opportunities are even greater. An Israeli-Palestinian peace would lay the groundwork for Ispajor (an economic union of Israel, Palestine and Jordan), the Middle East equivalent to Benelux (Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg). It's hard for us to remember now, but Benelux was created as a customs union in 1944, when World War II was still raging and the entire European economy was in a shambles. It became the nucleus for the entire European Union.

Israel and Palestine have the strongest tech economies in the region; a peace that would allow Israeli economic growth to extend to Palestine would then create opportunities for Jordan to join and turn its current divide between Palestinian Jordanians and native Jordanians into an advantage. Investors worldwide would flock to a stable and relatively well-governed bright spot in the region, with oil and gas resources, a port on the Mediterranean and highly educated Israelis and Arabs. It seems like a mirage today, but with an Israeli-Palestinian peace it would become a logical next step.

Abba Eban, the great Israeli diplomat and author with a flair for epigrams, is supposed to have said, after the Geneva Peace Conference in 1973: "The Arabs never miss an opportunity to miss an opportunity." Today it is the Israeli government that never misses an opportunity to miss an opportunity.

But Eban also said: "History teaches us that men and nations behave wisely once they have exhausted all other alternatives." Let us hope that the current Israeli government is the last alternative Israelis exhaust before they finally realize the tremendous opportunity of peace – if it is not too late.

"World-renowned entertainer and humanitarian Bono will introduce by video this year's inspiring Battle of Crete Award winner, Leyla Yunus, the human rights activist and director of Azerbaijan's Institute for Peace and Democracy, currently imprisoned in Azerbaijan. Her daughter, Dinara, will accept this award in Washington on her behalf. In 2013, Bono praised the Greek people's enduring legacy of courage in his introduction of another modern day hero for freedom and democracy, that year's Oxi Day Award winner John Githongo," said Foundation supporter George Logothetis. Logothetis will be delivering the keynote address at the October 28 gala.

She courageously hid a Jewish family in Nazi-occupied Athens during the Holocaust. I am honored to have presented this award to His Royal Highness at Buckingham Palace," said Chanos.

Jim Chanos

"The portion of the celebration taking place in Washington on October 28 will occur on the exact date that 75 years ago the Prime Minister of Greece famously defied the Axis Forces' demand for surrender with one word, "Oxi" ("No"). The battle that followed resulted in the first defeat of an Axis invasion that had swept through 15 other nations in the year-old war," said Foundation Advisory Board Member George Marcus, who will be delivering opening remarks at the October 28 gala.

"Last year, in a very emotional program, the Oxi Day Award was presented (posthumously) to American journalist James Foley, the first American publicly executed by ISIS. President Bill Clinton, who nominated Foley for the Award, introduced him via video, and his parents, Diane and John Foley, received the Award for their courageous son. We anticipate this year's presentation will be similarly moving. The 2015 Oxi Day Award recipient is Iraqi lawyer-turned-activist Khalil al-Dakhi who has devoted his life to saving women and children captured by ISIS as sex slaves. Mr. al-Dakhi was featured in a recent PBS documentary 'Escaping ISIS ,'" said Foundation Executive Director Mike Manatos. Foundation supporter Dean Metropoulos will be introducing al-Dakhi on October 28.

WJC's plan is interesting though - he is saying have her lean into ACA but explain it is not going to be the same old Obama ACA and first order of business is going to be repealing the Cadillac Tax. We have NOT leaned into our repeal of the Cadillac Tax b/c we were afraid of the health economists. I like leaning into it in a bigger way. Agree the Randi-Mary Kay op-ed is good, but I think a forceful argument that she is the only one who has the strategic ability and guts to really make the fixes we need is good.

JAKE - What do you think?

NIKKI - You think this would work?

John McCain Doesn't Know the Price of Gas/Can't Remember the Last Time He Bought Any

John McCain kind of stepped in it the other day, here in California, but luckily no one noticed. He was being driven from John Wayne airport to a fundraiser, and he took a quick call from Martin Wisckol of the Orange County Register. Wisckol asked him a series of softball questions so tedious McCain's driver had to crack the window so the breeze would keep him from passing out, but then this:

WISCKOL: I'd like to ask you a couple questions suggested by voters here. They're not reporter-type questions.

McCAIN: Sure. It'd be a pleasure.

WISCKOL: When was the last time you pumped your own gas and how much did it cost?

McCAIN: Oh, I don't remember. Now there's Secret Service protection. But I've done it for many, many years. I don't recall and frankly, I don't see how it matters. I've had hundreds and hundreds of town hall meetings, many as short a time ago as yesterday. I communicate with the people and they communicate with me very effectively.

... I'm going through a tunnel... ... bzzzzzzzzttttttt bzzzzzzttttttt...I'm gonna lose you... bzzzzttttttt... bye!

No, I added that last part.

Okay. A few things here.

1) John McCain doesn't know what gas costs, because the Secret Service protects him from finding out, possibly because they're afraid the knowledge will kill him. Not a healthy man.

2) John McCain isn't an elitist or a big government bureaucrat. He's a maverick who has certainly pumped his own gas at some point in his life, perhaps during the single 18-month period when he wasn't in the navy or in congress, but was living off his wife.

3) It doesn't matter. How do we know it doesn't matter? Because John McCain says it doesn't matter.

4) John McCain may not know what gas costs or when he last pumped any, or performed any other act not connected to politics or outpatient care, but he's had hundreds of town hall meetings, many as short a time ago as yesterday. Which somehow answers questions about gas prices, but it's not clear exactly how.

5) John McCain communicates with people and they communicate with him very effectively.

6) John McCain is an excellent driver. Dad lets him drive slow down the driveway every Saturday.

7) Fifteen minutes to Wapner.

Asking a politician about groceries is a dusty old trick. Mitt Romney doesn't know what Saran Wrap costs, and why should he? Unless it's important to the image he's trying to build, as a regular guy, or at least someone who gives a shit.

But some gotcha questions do matter.

For instance, back in 1999, when Andy Hiller had this exchange with then-Governor George W. Bush:

HILLER: Can you name the president of Chechnya?"

BUSH: No, can you?

HILLER: Can you name the president of Taiwan?

BUSH: Yeah, Lee.

HILLER: Can you name the general who's in charge of Pakistan?

BUSH: Wait, wait, is this 50 questions?

HILLER: No, it's four questions of four leaders in four hot spots.

BUSH: The new Pakistani general, he's just been elected -- not elected, this guy took over office. It appears this guy is going to bring stability to the country and I think that's good news for the subcontinent.

HILLER: Can you name him?

BUSH: General. I can name the general. General.

HILLER: And the prime minister of India?

BUSH: The new prime minister of India is -- no. Can you name the foreign minister of Mexico?

HILLER: No sir, but I would say to that, I'm not running for president.

BUSH: What I'm suggesting to you is, if you can't name the foreign minister of Mexico, therefore, you know, you're not capable about what you do. But the truth of the matter is you are, whether you can or not.

You'd think that the candidacy was over at "I can name the general. General," but it turns out it wasn't. These questions might not have mattered. (Pakistan? Come on! As if the president really needs to know about Pakistan!) What was important was the way the candidate answered.

Which was like a belligerent dick.

--

As opposed to John McCain on the question of pumping his own gas. Who comes off as a floundering panderer who's lost a step.

--

I'm not even sure Martin Wisckol was trying to play gotcha with John McCain. I think he was fishing for a colorful anecdote. If you read the rest of the interview, you'll see he certainly didn't ask any other questions that couldn't be answered by a press release.

John McCain has spent the last three months -- since he floated his gas tax holiday -- pretending to care about the cost of driving. He should have had a slightly better answer than "I've had hundreds of town halls."

He knows it, too. Which is why he panics after a few more questions, when Wisckol is trying to wind things up.

WISCKOL: Thank you very much for taking the time to talk with me.

McCAIN: Thank you. It's a pleasure.... Hang on just one second. I think the last time that I ... I've been on the campaign trail for so long I don't remember when I last filled up my own gas tank, but I certainly did for many, many, many years and I understand the difficulties and challenges that it poses for the people of California and my home state of Arizona. I thank you, my friend.

And the name of the general is General.

Subject:	UPDATE: How this quarter is going

John --

Here's an update on how this quarter has gone:

- Another Republican jumped into the race
- National Journal ranked us as one of the top Senate races in the country
- A dark money group launched an attack video against Ann online

Keeping up with all the curveballs takes a lot of resources. And those resources come from you.

This $35,000 FEC goal is our most important yet -- and we need to knock it out of the park. Our deadline is coming up soon. Make a contribution.

We've had some great accomplishments in this quarter as well. We crushed our 12,000 donor goal. 28,258 of you took action by signing petitions and sharing news.

So far, this has been a great quarter for Team Kirkpatrick. And hitting our $35,000 goal is the only way to complete it.

There are only 9 days left before the deadline. Make sure you get in your contribution before then.

Let's make sure we end this quarter stronger than we started it.

The Employment Situation in September

Posted by Jason Furman on October 3, 2014 at 9:30 AM

With today's report, America's businesses extended the longest streak of private-sector job gains on record. The data underscore that six years after the Great Recession—thanks to the hard work of the American people and in part to the policies the President has pursued—our economy has bounced back more strongly than most others around the world. But even as we take stock of the progress that has been made, too many Americans do not yet feel enough of the benefits. Yesterday, the President set out his vision for steps that can lay a new foundation for stronger growth, rising wages, and expanded economic opportunity.

FIVE KEY POINTS IN TODAY'S REPORT FROM THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

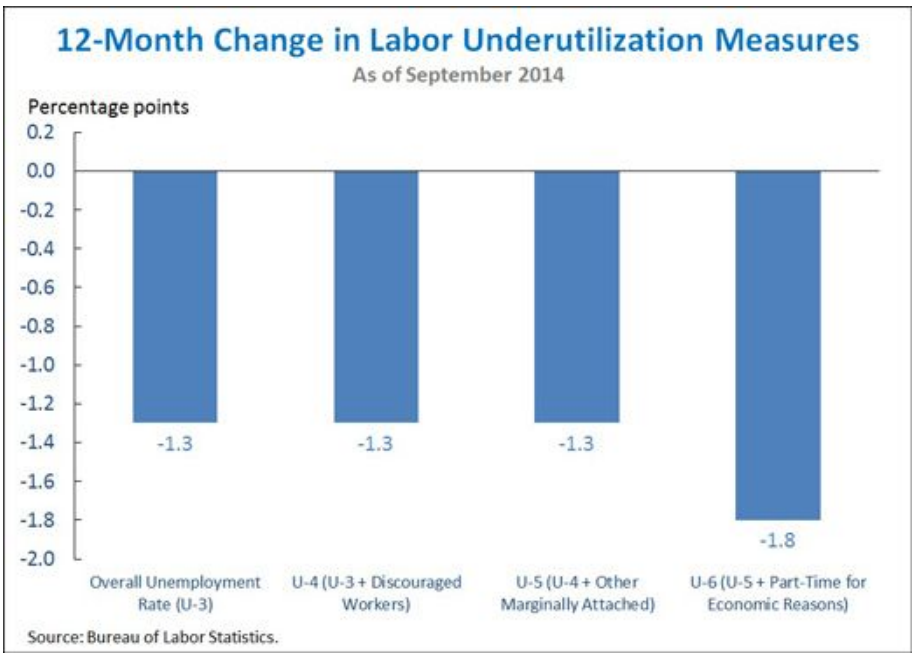

1. The private sector has added 10.3 million jobs over 55 straight months of job growth, extending the longest streak on record. Today we learned that total nonfarm payroll employment rose by 248,000 in September, mainly reflecting a 236,000 increase in private employment. Private-sector job growth was revised up for July and August, so that over the past twelve months, private employment has risen by 2.6 million. So far this year, private employment has risen by nearly 2 million, on pace for the strongest year of private-sector job growth since 1998.

2. The overall unemployment rate fell to 5.9 percent in September, the lowest since July 2008, and is down 1.3 percentage point over the last year. Notably, the 1.3 percentage point decline in the unemployment rate is nearly the largest drop in any one-year period since 1984 (behind only the 1.4 percentage point drop from June 2013 to June 2014). Of this drop, about 60 percent is due to declining long-term unemployment, even though the long-term unemployed represent about one-third of the jobless.

The magnitude of the drop in the overall unemployment rate since last September has been matched or exceeded by the declines in the broader measures of labor underutilization also published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. These measures include varying combinations of persons who have withdrawn from the labor force or who are working part-time for economic reasons. Reflecting the large measure of progress that has been made in the recovery, the measures of labor underutilization shown below are between 67 and 87 percent of the way back to their pre-recession averages. The broadest alternative measure of labor underutilization—the U-6 rate—still exhibits the greatest degree of elevation relative to its pre-recession average, but it is falling faster than the other measures, down 1.8 percentage point over the last year.

3. Total job growth in August was revised up by 38,000, continuing a pattern seen over the past several years of substantial upward revisions to the initial August report. From 2010-2012, the first estimate of job growth in August was revised up by an average of 84,000 at the time of the third estimate. Notably, the initial August 2011 estimate of no change in employment was subsequently revised to a gain of more than 100,000. While the average first-to-third estimate revision for August has been larger than for any other month, by the time of the annual benchmark revision, other months have been revised up as much or more. One reason that the August jobs number may be particularly susceptible to revision is that there tend to be large seasonal employment flows during the month, as many school districts begin instruction, temporary summer jobs come to an end, and autoworkers return from the yearly July shutdown for plant retooling.

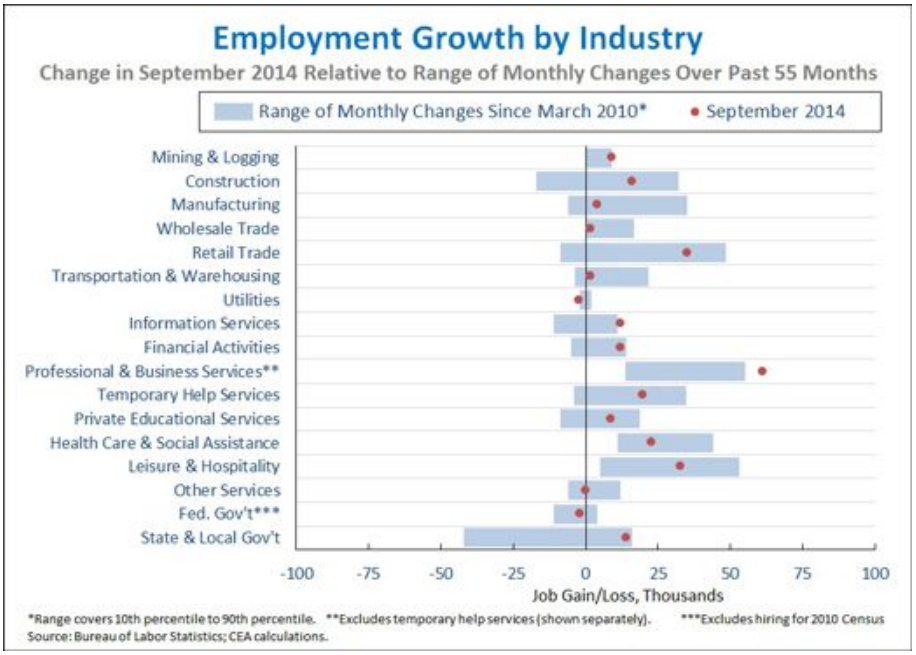

4. On the occasion of Manufacturing Day , we take stock of the major gains in the manufacturing sector seen over the course of the economic recovery—including more than 700,000 jobs added and an increase in the average workweek to levels not seen since World War II. The job growth in manufacturing since February 2010 includes 212,000 jobs added in motor vehicles and parts, 203,000 jobs in fabricated metal products, and 155,000 jobs in machinery. In addition, the average workweek for production and nonsupervisory workers in the manufacturing sector ticked up to 42.1 hours in September, near its highest level in over sixty years. Prior to last year, the average workweek in manufacturing had not reached 42 hours since World War II.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

5. The pattern of job growth across industries in September was generally in line with recent trends. Some of the industries that had above-average performances include professional and business services, which had one of its strongest months of the recovery, and retail trade, which added 35,000 jobs, roughly offsetting last month's below-trend performance in this industry. Furthermore, state and local governments combined posted a net gain of 14,000 jobs, double the average over the last twelve months. Across the 17 industries shown below, the correlation between the most recent one-month percent change and the average percent change over the last twelve months was 0.74, suggesting that the pattern of job growth across industries in September was broadly in line with recent trends.

As the Administration stresses every month, the monthly employment and unemployment figures can be volatile, and payroll employment estimates can be subject to substantial revision. Therefore, it is important not to read too much into any one monthly report and it is informative to consider each report in the context of other data that are becoming available.

Injustices: The Supreme Court's History of Comforting the Comfortable and Afflicting the Afflicted

Ian Millhiser's debut book tells the history of the Supreme Court through the eyes of the people who have suffered the most from it.

Center for American Progress Supreme Court expert Ian Millhiser's debut book, Injustices: The Supreme Court's History of Comforting the Comfortable and Afflicting the Afflicted is now available through Amazon , Barnes & Noble, and Indiebound .

"They won't be selling Injustices at the Supreme Court gift shop. Ian Millhiser's scathing, exuberant indictment of the many misdeeds of the nation's highest court is a necessary, and highly entertaining, corrective to the mythology that has always surrounded the work of the Justices."

—Jeffrey Toobin, author of The Oath and The Nine

Order now at Amazon , Barnes & Noble, or Indiebound.

In this powerful indictment of a venerated institution, Injustices tells the history of the Supreme Court through the eyes of the everyday people who have suffered the most from it. Since its inception, the justices of the Supreme Court have shaped a nation where children toiled in coal mines, where Americans could be forced into camps because of their race, and where a woman could be sterilized against her will by state law. The Court was the midwife of Jim Crow, the right hand of union busters, and the dead hand of the Confederacy. Nor is the modern Court a vast improvement, with its incursions on voting rights, its willingness to place elections for sale, and a looming threat to the Affordable Care Act that could rip health care away from millions.

As Millhiser explains, few American institutions have inflicted greater suffering on ordinary people than the Supreme Court of the United States. America ratified three constitutional amendments to provide equal rights to freed slaves, but the justices spent thirty years largely dismantling these amendments. Then they spent the next forty years rewriting them into a shield for the wealthy and the powerful. Nor do the progressive victories of the Warren era or recent progress on gay rights vindicate the institution. To the contrary, the Court paid little heed to the Constitution's promise of equal rights for decades, and the Warren Court's restoration of the Constitution's promises of equality, free speech, and fair justice for the accused was an historic accident. Indeed, if not for several unpredictable ev ent such as a chief justice's fatal heart attack and a former Ku Klux Klanman's dramatic change of heart, Brown v. Board of Education could hav e gone the other way.

Order Injustices now through Amazon , Barnes & Noble , or Indiebound.

"More than just an indictment of the Supreme Court, Injustices offers a stirring defense of the role government plays in bettering people's lives—and a heartbreaking window into the lives that are ruined when the justices place their own agenda above the law."

—Ted Strickland, former Ohio governor and former President, Center for American Progress Action Fund

"A powerful critique of the Supreme Court, which shows that it has largely failed through American history to enforce the Constitution and to protect our rights. With great clarity and poignant human stories throughout, Ian Millhiser has written a book that all who are interested in American government and our legal system—which should be all of us—must read."

—Erwin Chemerinsky, founding dean and distinguished professor of law at the University of California, Irvine School of Law

"Ian Millhiser's Injustices is a powerful reminder that for most of its history, the Supreme Court has erred on the side of protecting the privilege and powers of America's elites—and that it has so often done so by reading the Constitution upside-down. Millhiser has crafted an indictment of the Court's treatment of workers, minorities, women, voters, and powerless groups, with a deeply researched grounding in history and the law. His dispiriting conclusion is a powerful reminder of how much the Court matters, and how much more it could be."

We've been here before.

There's less than 48 hours until the most important finance deadline of the campaign to date. It's critical that we have a strong showing going into the March 5th primary.

When I was Finance Director for Barack Obama, we relied on small donations from people like you to show the power of our campaign.

Now, I'm asking you to step up again and donate to help move Los Angeles forward.

John -

I had a good discussion with Jeff today - thanks for making that happen.

It's great that the President weighed in today. If there is no EU/Greece deal, it's important that there be a Plan B to stabilize Greece --e.g. humanitarian assistance, efforts to provide some level of stability for a new drachma, etc.

We may be putting together a group of key Greek American (as well as non-Greek American economic and national security leaders) to advocate for/support any Administration efforts if a Plan B becomes necessary. I would like to get some feedback on this front -- I may call tomorrow or Thursday. Hopefully, a credible deal comes together -- but just in case.

Last item: it would be great if Secretary Clinton could weigh in in the appropriate manner - perhaps a statement in support of the Administration's efforts to help achieve a positive resolution and emphasizing the economic, humanitarian, and geopolitical importance of a good resolution. But I'll leave it to you as to whether or not this make sense from your/the Secretary's perspective.

Best,

Phil

John -

I hope all is well with you. I tried to call you today, but apparently the number I had for you is inoperative.

I wanted to speak with you briefly re: Greece - given the restrictions on the ELA lending to the Greek banks, the financial (and thus civil/political) system may dissolve quickly.

I know that you are very busy, but if you have a moment, I can be reached at 916-919-1177 .

Eryn -

For future reference, what is the best number to reach John or to leave a message? - if via you/your number, that's more than fine.

Thanks.

The following answer feels very close to the rural / urban response bernie has.

I'd drop it.

- I represented New York in the Senate, and New York City has much stricter gun laws than upstate New York, because their needs are different. That's why I think it's important that localities be able to make that decision for themselves.

I think it's fine to say when localities want to implement tougher laws based on their situation, I support that.

Hey all -

Jake asked that we circulate these points a little bit more broadly, given potential news focus on the stock market over the past week, and potentially in the near future. We will keep providing updates as turmoil continues, and are happy to answer any questions that might come up.

Best,

End of Day Market Update - 08/24/15

- On Monday, US Markets were turbulent, rising and falling by hundreds of points. The Dow fell more than 1,000 points in the first hour of trading today, before rebounding slowly over the course of the morning. As of 1:00 PM the Dow was down just 115 points or 0.7%. In the last 3 hours of trading prices declined once again, and by end of day the Dow was down 590 points or 3.6%. The S&P 500 was also down 3.9%. Conditions were slightly more negative in oil markets, where the US benchmark oil price fell more than 5%, driving the price of oil to its lowest levels since February 2009. Investors have sought the safety of U.S. Treasuries, driving the 10-year Treasury rate down below 2% for the first time since April. The recent volatility, which appears likely to continue in the near term, has been driven significantly by concerns about the Chinese economy and global growth, and the response of Chinese policymakers to their stock market decline and potentially slowing economy.

- Turmoil is global - international markets have faired poorly as well. International markets suffered slightly larger declines than US stocks. Markets in the UK, Germany, and France all declined between 4.5%-5.5%. The Chinese Shanghai index closed down 8.5%. It is worth noting these markets have closed for the day before US stocks rebounded and then fell again. The possibility of further substantial declines in China are more likely than substantial declines in the US given that the Shanghai exchange is flat since January, but is still up more than 40% over the last 52 weeks. That 40% gain has occurred despite weak growth in China. (By contrast, the S&P 500 is now down nearly 5% over the last year.)

- Despite turmoil and likely continuing volatility, there does not at this point appear to be fundamental risk to the U.S. economy or financial system. Major banks and asset managers generally appear to believe that today's movements are being viewed as the day-to-day fluctuations of a tense market, rather than serious cause for concern about the broader financial system at this time. Although Larry Summers tweeted comparisons to the 2007-2008 crisis, we have not heard many analysts echoing his concern or saying that recent turmoil is comparable to that period. While we should be attentive to systemic risks and the possibility they emerge from the current turmoil, we do not yet have information about these kind of broad-based concerns. Barring a collapse of the Chinese economy or financial system, export and financial links to the U.S. are small enough that a slowing Chinese economy should not significantly harm U.S. growth - although we are monitoring markets closely.

Q & A if asked:

Are you concerned about turmoil in the stock market, with the Dow down hundreds of points?

- I've been carefully monitoring turmoil in the stock market in the U.S. and abroad in the past weeks - especially connected with worries about the Chinese economy.
- Any time the stock market is moving up and down by hundreds of points, I'm concerned about the impact it could have on tens of millions of American workers and retirees who have their savings in mutual funds and in their 401(k)s. As Secretary of State, I saw our economy weather the financial crisis and a lot of headwinds from outside of our borders, and the profound effect it had on everyday Americans.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- If we want to protect Americans, their incomes, and their savings, we've got to make sure our economy is strong at home so we can weather turmoil in global markets anytime it comes onto our shores.
- The best thing we can do is what I've been talking about this entire campaign: We've got to grow our economy on solid foundations through strong growth, fair growth, and long-term growth. And we've got to ensure we take on risks in the financial system and hold Wall Street accountable so we don't have another crisis.

John -- It doesn't make sense.

Not a single moderator of a Presidential Debate so far has brought up the critical issue of the Supreme Court's Citizens United decision.

But we know the Democratic candidates want to talk about it. Hillary Clinton, Bernie Sanders, and Martin O'Malley ALL have staked out strong positions on campaign finance reform.

Tonight, we have a chance to bring this issue to the forefront of the national discussion when Rachel Maddow moderates a Democratic forum on MSNBC. But first, we need you with us.

Add your name to urge Rachel Maddow to ask the Democratic candidates how he or she would address the Citizens United decision, if elected President >>

Americans overwhelmingly want to get big money out of politics.[1]

But if we're going to continue to spread the word about our movement, we need this question to be asked on national TV.

Dear Colleagues,

I am writing to share with you the very sad news that Katherine McCarthy has entered a hospice and the prognosis is grave. I know that, for many of you, this news about Katherine's dire health situation is a shock. Friendly and open by nature, but also quite private about her life, Katherine did not want people to worry about her.

Katherine has been a wonderful, selfless colleague and a great friend. She has contributed to the Law Center in countless ways, she has brought all of us who know her great joy, and her warmth and concern for others have been an inspiration. It is a privilege to know her.

She is not receiving visitors. Please keep Katherine in your thoughts and prayers.

Sadly,
Bill

Spring Issue of Democracy: A Journal of Ideas
Now Available
Dear Democracy Reader,

When we think about fighting poverty, we tend to think first and automatically of programs. Head Start. Job Corps. Medicare. Medicaid. But there's another way to fight poverty, and we've been doing it for decades, and arguably with more success than the programs: through the tax code.

In our latest issue, Jason Furman , Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, unveils the Administration's new proposal in the continuing War on Poverty: an expansion of the earned-income and child tax credits. These tax credits have been instrumental in fighting poverty for decades, and have consistently won bipartisan support. The time has come, Furman argues, to expand them to benefit millions more.

Next, four very sharp essays: First, from Mike Konczal , is a sharp critique of the conservative fantasy of voluntarism--that voluntary organizations and the private sector are enough to provide social insurance for the public. Next is Brian Katulis on the progressive drift toward disengagement on foreign policy--and why that's a dangerous thing. Richard D. Kahlenberg writes on an important American institution that rarely gets the attention it deserves: the community college system. Finally, Molly Ball pens a response to our previous issue's symposium on the Tea Party.

The reviews, as usual, are stellar. James Surowiecki on the history of economic forecasting. Molly Worthen on religion and the postwar intellectuals. Tom Perriello on our affluent Congress. Vanessa Williamson on grassroots movements for the one percent. And Monica Potts on poverty journalism.

Readers like you make Democracy possible, so please consider giving a tax-deductible donation or signing up for a subscription , for yourself or a loved one . If you're on Twitter, be sure to follow us @demjournal . And we have a Facebook page , so please take a moment to "Like" us.

Thank you as always for reading, and enjoy!

Poverty and the Tax Code by Jason Furman
Tax credits have arguably done more to reduce poverty than programs have. It's time to expand them once again.

Conservatives dream of returning to a world where private charity fulfilled all public needs. But that world never existed -- and we're better for it.

Against Disengagement by Brian Katulis
Today's progressives are often as muddled in their thinking about U.S. involvement in the world as conservatives are divided.

Community of Equals? by Richard D. Kahlenberg
Few elites give much thought to community colleges. But they educate 44 percent of our undergraduates -- and they need help.

Response

Weak Tea by Molly Ball
Far from getting stronger, the Tea Party is now just another faction within the GOP, and an arriviste one at that. A response to the "Is the Party Over?" symposium.

Lessons from the Massachusetts Defeat

The Massachusetts Senate race is a watershed event that has enormous implications for this political year. The media is intent on making it a referendum on President Obama and his health care reform plan. But that interpretation of the results is just flat wrong.

President Obama maintains a fairly robust 55% approval rate in Massachusetts. And while it is true that the polling indicates that the "Obama Health Reform Plan" as a general concept is not very popular there, the individual components of reform continue to have substantial levels of public support – both in Massachusetts and around the country.

The fact is that if you see enough TV spots saying that the "Obama health care plan" will cost jobs, take away your freedom, and cut your Medicare (all factually wrong) – you start to believe it. Because of the massive length of the health care battle, the pro-health care reform forces, have simply been outgunned on TV by the big insurance companies and the Chamber of Commerce (mainly funded by the big insurance companies) that have pockets of infinite depth.

On the other hand, if you ask people if they want to end the ability of insurance companies to use preexisting conditions to deny care; make health insurance available at affordable prices to everyone; require insurance companies to spend the bulk of their premiums on health care instead of profits and CEO salaries; or give people the alternative of a public option – you get very strong support.

Add to that the fact that 98% of people in Massachusetts have health insurance because of their own state based health care reform -- and almost 80% are happy with their health insurance -- and it's clear that the race there was not at all a referendum on health care reform.

There are however major critical lessons for Democrats in the Massachusetts defeat:

Lesson #1.The big take away: don't run a bad campaign. The Coakley campaign made four critical errors any one of which, by itself, probably cost her the election.

First, they did not follow the first law of the Obama campaign to "leave no stone unturned". Coakley went on vacation in the Caribbean after her primary victory. She didn't campaign and she didn't raise money. When the campaign's pollsters – the respected firm of Lake Research – proposed doing a tracking poll after the primary, they were told there was no money. As a result, the campaign was caught flat footed as Brown began to surge.

The reason you leave no stone unturned in a campaign, it to account for the unexpected. Yes, Coakley was 20 points up on Brown after the primary, but if the campaign was not asleep at the switch it would have discovered the Brown surge while it could still be stopped.

Second, the campaign allowed Brown to define himself – and Coakley -- for swing voters. When Brown began a wave of advertising between Christmas and New Years, it went unanswered. The moment Brown began to surge, the campaign should have hit back and defined him as a shill for the Big Banks and insurance companies – not the attractive, charismatic outsider he appeared to be to many voters.

Third, the campaign allowed their candidate to be perceived as the elite insider – and ceded to Brown the role of crusading outsider. Democrats win when they appear to be what they ought to be – populist agents of change – not competent insider technocrats. That is particularly true when people are angry at the status quo.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Forth, unbelievably, the campaign had no field program. It was left to the heroic efforts of Organize for America (OFA) to try to save the day by improvising a field program in the last week and a half. More than anything else, Coakley lost because of a wave of Republican turnout. Until OFA arrived there was no apparatus in place to increase Democratic turnout. That borders on political malpractice. OFA did everything it could. Over the last weekend OFA made over 1.2 million turn out calls to potential Democratic voters. But great field programs – particularly door to door programs that are the most effective means of boosting turnout -- must be organized with several months of lead time – not a week and a half.

OFA proved once again how invaluable it is to the Democratic Party. Were it not for their efforts – and the Obama trip to Massachusetts – Coakley could have been routed in a blowout that would have shaken Democratic confidence to its foundation.

Even with all of these problems, Coakley might have still pulled it out had Brown himself not been an exciting, engaging, energetic candidate with an interesting history who ran a flawless campaign. In the end, elections are about the candidate and their campaigns. People vote for people; and to the voters the quality of their campaigns is a powerful symbol of the qualities of the candidate.

Lesson #2: There is a great deal of anger in America that is focused first and foremost on people's own economic prospects and frustration that change appears so difficult. Democrats have to do everything in our power to deliver jobs. And we must focus that anger at the people who caused the economic meltdown and are delaying fundamental change: the insurance companies, the Big Wall Street banks, the energy companies.

The fact of the matter is that when people are angry, if you don't focus that anger on the people who really caused their problems – they will focus it on the people in charge – in this case Democrats – even if they were not mainly to blame.

It was the financial sector – Wall Street speculators, the Big Banks, the insurance companies – that caused the worst economic disaster since the Great Depression. And the Republicans – and their "markets uber alles" philosophy made it all possible.

Democrats must have a clear, populist frame to win elections in 2010. In Massachusetts the campaign began to talk about the President's proposal to tax Wall Street in the final hours, but it was too late. Coakley had allowed herself to be framed as an insider, technocrat versus a crusading populist outsider – even though Brown will in fact go to Washington and vote down the line for the big insurance companies and Wall Street Banks.

To appeal to independent voters we do not have to be "more moderate" or "measured" as some have argued. We must be bolder and more populist.

And the problem is not – as one commentator argued last night – a frustration with the "fiscal overreach" of the Democrats. The problem is that we have not produced enough jobs. Democrats must pass a large jobs program now, and the deficit can't stand in the way. And let's remember, it was George Bush who turned a Clinton surplus into more debt that all other previous President's combined.

Lesson #3: We have to keep our base inspired and mobilized -- to make change and to win elections. The Massachusetts special election taught the same lesson as the Democrats' catastrophic loss in 1994 – we have to inspire our voters to go to the polls. Democrats lost control of Congress in 1994 because our voters stayed home.

In Massachusetts the right wing base was infused with excitement over the possibility of taking progressive icon Ted Kennedy's Senate seat – and hobbling Obama's agenda in the Senate. The Democratic base was not inspired by the relatively bland Coakley and has been generally dispirited by the difficulty of passing health care, Lieberman's sabotage of the public option – and the general recognition that Barack Obama can not simply wave a wand and make change.

The insurance companies, Wall Street banks and energy companies haven't just rolled over and played dead. They have put up tough – tooth and nail battles – to defend the status quo.

Though I don't believe that the shape of the health care bill would have likely been a great deal different, there is no question that President Obama would be in better political shape with the base of the Democratic Party if he had been a more forceful advocate of the public option – and appeared more forceful in taking on Wall Street.

On the other hand, Progressive leaders across America need to direct their own frustration at the forces that are defending the status quo and standing in the way of the Obama agenda. They need to take personal responsibility for rallying the base against our true enemies – Wall Street, the insurance industry, the energy companies and the Republicans -- not encouraging cynicism and disaffection of base voters. That sense of frustration lead directly to a victory for Brown and now we are stuck with one more huge impediment to change in the U.S. Senate.

Lesson #4: Democrats must do whatever is necessary to pass a good health care reform now. The President, House Speaker and Senate Majority Leader have all pledged to do just that. The absolute worst response to the Republican victory in Massachusetts would be to cut and run. We have to muster our forces and do whatever is necessary to get it done.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bad enough that the late Senator Edward Kennedy's seat is now in the hands of a Republican that does not share his progressive values. We must do whatever is necessary to assure that the fulfillment of his life long dream of health care for all is not thwarted as well.

That will probably require that some portion of the bill be passed through the budget reconciliation process that requires only 51 votes, now that the Senate no longer has 60 members who caucus with the Democrats. If so, so be it.

The idea that a minority of 41 members of the Senate can thwart the will of the majority is fundamentally undemocratic in the first place.

In fact, the Senate needs to change its rules to eliminate the abusive use of filibusters that now effectively require 60 votes to pass any significant piece of legislation.

The Massachusetts loss was a set back for the Progressive agenda. But it is in times of adversity that voters get to test the mettle of leaders and political parties. Time to square our shoulders, stand up straight, and show America that we can really make fundamental change.

Former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton is comfortably ahead of potential Democratic rivals for the 2016 presidential nomination and holds double-digit leads against would-be Republican foes, according to a new poll.

Mrs. Clinton is the choice of two-thirds of Democrats and Democratic-leaning independents, followed by Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts at 9 percent and Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr. at 8 percent, the CNN/ORC poll said. Those numbers are essentially unchanged from a month

USA Today: “Hillary Clinton again leads Gallup's list of most admired women”

By Catalina Camia

December 29, 2014

Hillary Rodham Clinton wasn’t on a ballot, doesn’t have her own TV network or magazine, and didn’t win a Nobel Prize this year.

But for the 13th year in a row, Clinton is the most admired woman in the world in an annual Gallup Poll. The former secretary of State, who just might run for president in 2016, was mentioned by 12% of Gallup respondents when they were asked whom do you admire the most.

Clinton topped Oprah Winfrey, the multi-hyphenated media mogul who was mentioned by 8% of respondents, and Malala Yousafzai, the teenager from Pakistan who risked her life so girls could have the right to an education. Malala, the youngest-ever winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, was named most admired woman by 5% of the Gallup respondents.

This is the 17th time in the last 18 years — and 19th overall — that Clinton has been named most admired woman in the Gallup Poll. Laura Bush toppled Clinton in 2001 for the top spot on the Gallup list.

Despite a challenging year for President Obama, he was named the most admired man in the world by 19% of Gallup respondents. Obama has occupied the top spot in the Gallup Poll for each of the last seven years, since he was first elected president in 2008. Pope Francis came in second this year (6%) and Bill Clinton was third on the 2014 Gallup list (3%).

The survey of 805 adults was taken Dec. 8-11 and has an error margin of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

Fox News: “Dems race to back Clinton even before 2016 announcement”

[No author mentioned]

December 27, 2014

High-profile Democrats are jumping on the “Ready for Hillary” bandwagon, supporting Clinton for president before she even enters the race -- boosting her presumptive candidacy and potentially their own political fortunes.

Sens. Tim Kaine, D-Va., and Al Franken, D-Minn., are among the biggest names to get on board -- positioning themselves in a familiar game in which early supporters are often rewarded with plum administration jobs or some political favor if their candidate wins.

“It’s a time-honored tradition,” said Joe Trippi, a Democratic strategist and Fox News contributor. “And a lot of candidates remember who was there early, who was willing to take the leap.”

What makes Clinton’s case so remarkable is the number of soft endorsements from A-list Democrats before she has officially announced whether she will run.

Kaine was among the first, telling a gathering of female Democrats in South Carolina this spring that Clinton is “the right person for the job.”

“So I’m doing my bit now to encourage Hillary Clinton to run,” he said.

Clinton appears to have plenty of encouragement, including extraordinary early-polling numbers.

A recent averaging of polls by RealClearPolitics.com shows her leading all potential Democratic White House candidates with 61.5 percent of the likely vote -- 49.2 percentage points ahead of her closest potential challenger, Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren.

Though Clinton also enjoyed the lead in early polls in her 2008 presidential run, such numbers appear enticing for politicians, donors and others looking for perhaps a once-in-a-lifetime chance to have a friend in the White House and even land a top appointment.

Franken is among the most recent to give his support.

“I think that Hillary would make a great president,” he told MSNBC. “I think that I’m ready for Hillary.”

Franken, whose politics appear closer to those of Warren’s, said she is also “great” but “not running.”

The phrase “Ready for Hillary” appears to have started in January 2013 as a political action committee that organizers say “quickly became a nationwide grassroots movement” encouraging Clinton to run.

The PAC now boasts more than 2 million supporters and 50,000 donors. It has so far collected $4.43 million in donations with $875,626 in available cash, according to the most recent Federal Election Commission filings.

Howard Dean, a former Vermont governor and 2004 presidential candidate, also is backing Clinton, a former first lady, secretary of State and New York senator.

Earlier this month, Dean wrote a 660-word op-ed piece in Politico in which he touted his long-time political association with Clinton and listed her professional accomplishments, declaring her “by far the most qualified person in the United States to serve as president.”

“If she runs, I will support her,” he wrote.

Dean was chairman of the Democratic National Committee in 2008 when Clinton and Barack Obama competed for the party’s presidential nomination and his job was to get a Democrat in the White House.

His successful effort led to speculation, particularly after he resigned from his chairmanship days after the general election, that Obama would offer him a Cabinet or other high-level administration post. However, such a deal never materialized.

Clinton appears as if she’s already running a campaign, considering she published a book and spent the past several months fulfilling a full slate of speaking engagements and stumping for fellow Democrats during the elections that concluded last month.

However, she has given no specific deadline on announcing whether she will indeed run in 2016.

That several Democratic politicians have already signed on might seem unusual. But Trippi points out that those who wait often get passed over in the game of low-risk, low-reward.

“And if an endorsement comes after the nomination it’s like ‘ehh,’ ” he said.

Among the other Democrats also throwing early support to Clinton is Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel, who worked in the Bill Clinton administration and later served as Obama’s chief of staff.

In June, Illinois Sen. Dick Durbin joined Emanuel as a headliner for a Ready for Hillary fundraiser in the Chicago area.

And California Rep. Brad Sherman, a 2008 Clinton supporter, is encouraging her to run again.

“Millions of Americans are ready for Hillary to run -- and ready to support her if she does” he said recently. “She was an outstanding senator and secretary of State. I know she will be an outstanding president.”

Wall Street Journal: “Hillary Clinton Faces Uphill Fight for White, Rural Vote”

By Beth Reinhard

December 29, 2014 1:19 a.m. ET

DEVALLS BLUFF, Ark.—White, working-class voters in eastern Arkansas for years backed Democratic candidates, among them Bill Clinton and outgoing Gov. Mike Beebe, but have moved sharply toward Republicans in recent elections.

Now, as the 2016 election takes shape, some of Hillary Clinton ’s allies are trumpeting her potential as a presidential candidate to bring these voters back to the Democratic Party and to run competitively in a handful of states, including Arkansas, that have spurned President Barack Obama.

But even here, where Mrs. Clinton was the state’s first lady, many voters say they view her with the same leeriness they do Mr. Obama and other national Democrats. That points to a significant question should Mrs. Clinton run: whether enough such voters can separate her from the national party many have grown to dislike.

“I’m mad at the Democratic Party, and I don’t see Hillary changing that,” said Eddie Ciganek, a 61-year-old farmer who serves on Prairie County’s governing board and who has voted Democrat at times. “Her thinking isn’t going to be very far off from President Obama’s thinking, and I don’t think they’re moving the country in the right direction.”

Occasional Democratic voter Johnny Watkins, 64, wearing a light-blue work shirt after finishing his shift at the county landfill, said of Mrs. Clinton: “I don’t think she has any concerns about us.”

Working-class voters have long been a bedrock of Democratic support, and the party continues to do well with voters from lower-income households overall, according to exit polls.

But white, more rural voters in the South and elsewhere have been fleeing the party. Just five years ago, Arkansas Democrats held both Senate seats, three out of four House seats, the governor’s office and control of both chambers of the state legislature. The election in November of Republicans Tom Cotton to the U.S. Senate and Asa Hutchinson to the governor’s office will leave the Democratic Party without a single federal or statewide officeholder in Arkansas, a state that Bill Clinton carried twice by at least 17 percentage points.

Mrs. Clinton’s allies are confident she can attract white voters who have turned away from her party, particularly women. Democratic pollster Geoff Garin, who worked on her 2008 campaign, said she “demonstrated a significant ability to not only win votes from working-class white women but to connect with them on a personal level.”

After a rocky start in that campaign, Mrs. Clinton cast herself as a scrappy underdog and union ally while topping Mr. Obama in more than 20 states in Democratic primaries in places such as Pennsylvania and Ohio that have many white, working-class voters.

Recent Wall Street Journal/NBC News polling shows that Mrs. Clinton’s appeal among those voters has withered.

In June 2008, Mrs. Clinton was viewed positively by 43% of whites without college degrees and negatively by 44%. Last month, 32% of that group held a positive view and 48% had a negative view. Her image among those voters is only slightly better than that of Mr. Obama.

“The Democratic Party is in terrible shape with white, working-class voters, and there’s no evidence that Hillary Clinton brings anything unique to the table,” said Republican pollster Bill McInturff, who helps direct Journal/NBC News polling.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the same time, Mrs. Clinton draws substantial support from white women overall and from suburban women. Narrow majorities of those groups said in a December Journal/NBC News survey that they would consider supporting Mrs. Clinton for president, putting her far ahead of seven potential Republican candidates and Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts.

Mrs. Clinton's office didn't respond to a request for comment.

In Arkansas, which Mr. Obama lost by 24 percentage points in 2012, interviews suggest the years that Mrs. Clinton spent here don't mitigate her support of the Affordable Care Act or the president's order shielding millions of illegal immigrants from deportation.

"She's never been a home girl," said Mr. Ciganek, who pointed to her choice of names after marriage. "It's not Hillary Clinton. It's Hillary Rodham Clinton," he noted.

Republicans also are trying to sully Mrs. Clinton with working-class voters by flagging her ties to Wall Street and her six-figure speaking fees. In a sign those attacks may be breaking through, 40-year-old Angela Thrift, who earns $9 an hour at a day-care center in nearby Carlisle, said, "She may have cared before she became famous and rich, but she doesn't work for a living like we do." Mrs. Thrift said she voted a straight GOP ticket in November.

Local officials say that a state where a candidate's personality, roots and populism were once able to transcend party lines has become as politically polarized as the rest of the country.

"The nationalization of politics has come to Arkansas," said Democratic state Rep. John Vines over a plate of barbecue at McClard's, a favorite Bill Clinton haunt in Hot Springs, where the former president grew up.

In the November election, close ties to the Clintons and deep family roots in the state didn't save Democratic Sen. Mark Pryor, who lost his re-election bid and trailed Mr. Cotton by 28 points among white voters without college degrees, exit polls found.

Democrats have been winning a smaller slice of white voters in general, but increasing participation by Hispanic and Asian-American voters have helped the party in presidential-election years, even without winning many Southern states. Still, the steep Democratic losses among white voters in the latest midterm, coupled with uncertainty about minority turnout without Mr. Obama on the ballot, is fueling concerns in the party about 2016.

Democratic strategist Mitch Stewart, who is advising a super PAC preparing for Mrs. Clinton's campaign, called the former senator and secretary of state "a natural messenger for working families" because of her support for raising the minimum wage and measures aimed at ensuring equal pay for women.

"Secretary Clinton can appeal to a broad cross-section of voters—and she has a proven track record of building support among white, working class voters in key states," said Mr. Stewart, who worked for Mr. Obama in 2008's primaries.

Mr. Beebe, the governor, said Mrs. Clinton needs to speak plainly to middle-class voters who feel the American dream is out of reach. "She has to try to make as much personal contact as she can, given the constraints of a national election," he said.

Associated Press: "Hillary Clinton's Economic Approach Under Scrutiny"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Ken Thomas

December 17, 2014 8:29 a.m. EST

If Hillary Rodham Clinton seeks the White House again, her message on the economy could be an important barometer as she courts fellow Democrats.

Members of her party are watching closely how the former secretary of state outlines steps to address income inequality and economic anxieties for middle-class families. Some members of the party's liberal wing remain wary of Clinton's ties to Wall Street, six-figure speaking fees and protective bubble.

Clinton is widely expected to announce a presidential campaign next year and remains the prohibitive favorite to succeed President Barack Obama as the party's nominee in 2016. But how she navigates a party animated by economic populism, an approach personified by Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, could represent one of her biggest hurdles. Democrats bruised from GOP gains in the 2014 elections are pushing for big policy changes — raising the minimum wage and pay equity, for example — that favor the declining middle class.

"We don't win when we play small-ball and calibrate. Why not try to be bold?" said Anna Galland of MoveOn.org, which launched a draft campaign to lure Warren into the race.

Warren says she's not running for president, but her confrontational approach on Wall Street and reducing the gap between the rich and poor has generated a loyal following. She showcased this posture during December's "lame duck" session of Congress, when she led the charge against a $1.1 trillion omnibus spending bill — ultimately signed by Obama — that repealed part of the Dodd-Frank financial law and loosened contribution caps for some political donors. Clinton has yet to comment on the spending plan.

During the fall elections, Clinton often pointed to the broad prosperity during her husband's administration and advocated for policies to raise the minimum wage, address pay equity for women and provide paid leave for new mothers.

In a nod to liberals, Clinton has voiced concerns about the concentration of wealth, pointing to the rise in income and wealth to the top 0.01 percent of the population. "Some are calling it a throwback to the 'Gilded Age' of the robber barons," Clinton said in May.

Clinton also has stumbled on the economy. At a fall event, she drew criticism from Republicans when she said "don't let anybody tell you that it's corporations and businesses that create jobs." She quickly cleaned up those comments, arguing that trickle-down economics had failed.

Her supporters point to her 2008 primary campaign, when she scored wins in Ohio and Pennsylvania, as an indicator of how she could connect with working-class families. They also downplay the differences between her and Warren on the economy.

"I think the debate is not going to be about big major fundamental directions for the economy. The disagreement will be how to get there," said former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, who has backed Clinton.

Clinton could have more opportunities to connect with — or alienate — liberals in 2015.

One moment could come on the nomination of Lazard investment banker Antonio Weiss to lead a Treasury Department office overseeing domestic finance. Weiss, Warren contends, would represent a long line of Wall Street executives who are part of the revolving door between Washington and the financial markets.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton has not yet spoken publicly about Weiss' nomination.

She remains a favorite of Wall Street from her time representing New York in the Senate. At a recent conference sponsored by the New York Times' DealBook, Goldman Sachs chairman and CEO Lloyd Blankfein said he had "always been a fan of Hillary Clinton" and argued it was important for political leaders to have relationships with key institutions. "I certainly don't think it's a virtue to declare a big segment of the economy off limits," he said.

Promoting economic growth and wages will also be on the calendar. The AFL-CIO has invited Warren to deliver the keynote address at its national summit on wages in early January, giving her a plum appearance before labor leaders.

About a week later, the Center for American Progress, which was founded by ex-Clinton administration officials, will release a report offering ways to spur middle-class growth, ideas that might guide Clinton's agenda. The panel is co-chaired by Lawrence Summers, a former Treasury secretary under Bill Clinton.

Tad Devine, an adviser to Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, who is considering a 2016 presidential campaign, noted that Bill Clinton campaigned in 1992 as a different kind of Democrat willing to reform welfare and appeal to centrists. This time, he said, Hillary Clinton will need to make a decision of how she will position herself on the economy.

"There is a huge audience right now for people who want to have a completely different economic theory of what's wrong with the country and how to fix it," Devine said.

CNN Opinion: “Why Hillary Clinton needs an Elizabeth Warren challenge”

By Julian E. Zelizer

December 29, 2014 7:53 a.m. EST

Hillary Clinton hasn't said whether she's going to run for president in 2016. And Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren has said, repeatedly, that she's not planning to run.

But, given the dynamics of today's politics, the two women need each other. And they both should run for the Democratic nomination.

A primary challenge from Warren could be the very best thing to happen to Clinton in a run for the presidency.

Most pundits have argued that a Warren challenge would be a problem that Clinton needs to confront, a genuine roadblock in her path to the presidency. The division and discord, they say, would be a repeat of the 2008 primaries where she ultimately lost to Barack Obama.

But a Warren candidacy could have a very healthy effect for Clinton and for the Democratic Party. The biggest challenge that Clinton faces right now, assuming that she decides to run, is that she might be unable to generate enough excitement among Democrats that would mobilize voters and excite the media in the general election. Part of the problem revolves around the same old issue of "inevitability."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As in 2008, people treat her candidacy as a given and assume that she would be the likely Democratic nominee.

In American politics, voters tend to like the underdog. When Clinton hit the campaign trail in 2008 as the "inevitable" winner, she often fell flat. Obama used the image of inevitability against her. Indeed, some of the finest moments in her campaign came toward the end when it became clear that Obama was probably going to win the nomination. Her fight intensified, and she made a much stronger appeal to key elements of the Democratic Party.

As New York Sen. Chuck Schumer recently reminded his party, Democrats do best when they deal with the issues facing the middle class and advance an agenda that focuses on economic security for all.

Far from being "radical," this has been the kind of policy agenda for which Democratic voters thirst. It was the heart of the New Deal and the Great Society, as well as successful Democratic midterm campaigns (like 1982 or 2006) and the 2008 election. In recent times, Democrats have done well when they pay attention to the middle class and suffer when they move too far away from these issues. This kind of agenda could inspire Democratic voters and attract independents who are frustrated with the continued challenges facing the middle class.

If Warren forces Clinton to confront these issues and to articulate a stronger response to the economic issues of our days -- creating countervailing pressure to the political experts who will implore her to stay away from these questions -- it would only make the former first lady and secretary of state a stronger candidate.

Warren's candidacy would force Clinton to put herself on the record over how she would help the middle class -- committing to the kinds of policies that will be desirable to many voters, including some independents and even moderate Republicans who are struggling in this economy and who are uncomfortable with the solutions offered by a GOP that continues to lean hard to the right.

A Warren candidacy would also put pressure on Clinton's team to make sure they pay close attention to the grass roots. In the 2008 primaries, the Clinton campaign faltered in dealing with the political ground war, the job of mobilizing and organizing local activists and deploying social media to bring out supporters.

If there is no Democratic challenger, Clinton might not do enough to prepare for the onslaught she would face from a GOP, a party armed with tea party activists and a huge network of campaign donors ready for battle. If Warren runs, Clinton will be forced to have her campaign infrastructure in place and in top form before the general election campaign begins.

There is also the virtue of Clinton sharpening her basic campaign skills. Although she has never really left politics since her husband's election as President in 1992, she is probably a bit rusty, as her book rollout in June showed.

In the current media environment, there is no room for mistakes -- and given that the Republicans might have some pretty strong candidates in the mix, she will have to be at the top of her game.

Clinton is an immensely skilled politician and can compete with the best, but the challenge of running against Warren would make her stronger by the fall of 2016.

Both candidates would benefit from a real primary. Polls show Clinton has a commanding lead against any challenger, including Warren, so the odds are this would not be a genuine threat to her nomination.

But a primary would vastly enhance Warren's stature on Capitol Hill and give her a bigger profile within the party for years to come.

For Clinton, a vigorous challenge from the base of the party will be just the kind of competitive spur that she needs.

Palin Attacks Biden While He's At Mother-In-Law's Funeral

While the presidential campaign has taken a decidedly personal and vicious tilt these past few days, one individual who has generally been left out of the fray has been Sen. Joe Biden. That's because the Delaware Democrat has been off the trail bereaving the loss of his mother-in-law to a heart attack.

As such an informal detente has been in place when it comes to attacking him. But on Tuesday, Sarah Palin broke the truce.

Speaking to a rabid crowd in Florida, the Alaska Governor was set to focus her ire primarily on Barack Obama. And, for the most part, she did, arguing that he was associated with domestic terrorists, tied to the heads of evil Fannie Mae and dangerously committed to hosting summits of Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

Then, however, she let loose. "Will [Obama] now claim that his ticket doesn't define higher taxes as patriotic? Remember that's what Joe Biden had said. Will he claim that he has just learned now that tax increases on small businesses kill jobs?"

Certainly the Biden dig was much softer than those aimed at the head of the ticket. But with the Senator having been off the trail for the past several days, Palin surely was aware of the elements behind his absence. Whether she slipped up or this was deliberate is another matter.

This sounds like they are following what bush and clinton did - they're getting the photo of the rose garden walk to the oval.
I'd rather have one photo, but not sure this worth saying no to if there's precedent.

Subject: resending White House - Monday

Here is the proposal from the White House – Dave Cusack, copied – will be doing a walk through tomorrow.
If this isn't acceptable or you want changes, pls reply all. Thanks

-- The President and Mrs. Bush would greet the President-Elect and Mrs. Obama at the North Portico of the White House. We envision Pool coverage of the arrival.  this is similar to how we normally handle arrivals for visiting foreign leaders -- e.g., when the Queen came in May of 2007.*
 there is a slight chance the north portico will not be use-able on Monday due to Inaugural construction. We are checking on that. If there is a problem, we would shift this to the South Portico. I will let you know as soon as that detail is confirmed. I'm hoping we can use North Portico.*

-- After the arrival greeting, the President and Mrs. Bush would escort the President-Elect and Mrs. Obama into the White House, where they would be greeted by Admiral Stephen Rochon, who is Director of the Executive Residence and Chief Usher.

-- The President and Mrs. Bush and The President-Elect and Mrs. Obama would visit privately for a few moments, at their discretion.
 This would give us a chance to reposition the Press Pool(s) for the next movement.*

-- When ready, the two spouses would split off, and Mrs. Bush would proceed to give Mrs. Obama a tour of the Residence.
 I believe the details of this portion are being / will be worked out directly between Anita McBride (Mrs. Bush's chief of staff) and Mrs. Obama's staff, but please let me know if you understand differently.*

-- The President and the President-Elect would proceed downstairs and on to the Oval Office via the Colonnade. We envision Pool coverage of the Colonnade walk.

-- The President and the President-Elect would then meet in the Oval Office. We have this meeting on the President's schedule for 1 hour, ending at 3:20 pm. We are recommending that this be Photo Release (closed press, but an official photo would be released).

-- After the meeting, the President and President-Elect would proceed back to the Residence, where they would link back up with the spouses.

-- The President-Elect and Mrs. Obama would then depart.

Well it took almost 6 full years, but last night at 8:25 pm, Wells Katherine joined her older brothers Anders (5), Briggs (2), and sister Molly (4) to complete this branch of the Siewert/Anderson family.

The older kids were (mostly) excited to welcome their new baby sister, and Christine and I are looking forward to watching them play mixed doubles in about 10 years.

The latest addition took an extra 10 days to bulk up to 8 pounds, 10 ounces at birth, and she's bundle of energy so she should fit right in.

We can't wait for you all to meet her.

Peace and Love,

Subject:	Fwd: Flint's Crisis Is About More Than Water, by Chris Hedges (Febr 8, 2016)

Well worth the seven minutes read

Good morning,

Here is a beginning critique of the corporatization of society and its consequences. As the author emphasizes, this is not just about polluted water in Flint, Michigan, but about the role of corporations and how they influence government. Without religious values, no perspective exists for discerning right from wrong. If this tendency continues to expand, we will lose our social compass and further decline into expediency and efficiency without the values that give meaning to life beyond profit and gain. This is not just an American issue, as it increasingly is a worldwide condition.

Author Chris Hedges sees this but can't quite bring himself to define the solution which he describes as "moral values." Yes, he is on the right track, but he doesn't define this because of his failure to articulate how religion is the essential glue that holds society together.

This should help us recall President George Washington's final guidance to America which I am appending below from his 1796 farewell address:

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. ... Let it simply be asked: Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice ? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

Flint's Crisis

Is About More Than Water

by Chris Hedges

What is in the mind of someone who knowingly poisons children and impairs their lives? Why did the politicians, regulators and bureaucrats who knew the water in Flint, Mich., was toxic lie about the danger for months? What does it say about a society that is ruled by, and refuses to punish, those who willfully destroy the lives of children?

The crisis in Flint is far more ominous than lead-contaminated water. It is symptomatic of the collapse of our democracy. Corporate power is not held accountable for its crimes. Everything is up for sale, including children. Our regulatory agencies—including the federal Environmental Protection Agency, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and Michigan's Department of Environmental Quality—have been defunded, emasculated and handed over to corporate-friendly stooges. Our corrupt courts are part of a mirage of justice. The role of these government agencies and courts, and of the legislatures, is to sanction abuse rather than halt it.

The primacy of profit throughout the society takes precedence over life itself, including the life of the most vulnerable. This corporate system of power knows no limits. It has no internal restraints. It will sacrifice all of us, including our children, on the altar of corporate greed. In a functioning judicial system, Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder and Flint's former emergency manager, Darnell Earley, along with all the regulatory officials who lied as a city was being sickened, would be in jail facing trial .

Hannah Arendt in "The Origins of Totalitarianism," Gitta Sereny in "Into That Darkness," Omer Bartov in "Murder in Our Midst," Alexander Solzhenitsyn in "The Gulag Archipelago," Primo Levi in "The Drowned and the Saved" and Ella Lingens-Reiner in "Prisoners of Fear" argue that the modern instrument of evil is the technocrat, the man or woman whose sole concern is technological and financial efficiency, whose primary measurement of success is self-advancement, even if it means piling up corpses or destroying the lives of children.

"Monsters exist," Levi noted, "but they are too few in number to be truly dangerous. More dangerous are the common men." These technocrats have no real ideology, other than the ideology that is in vogue. They want to get ahead, to rise in the structures of power. They know how to make the collective, or the bureaucracy, work on behalf of power. Nothing else is of importance. "The new state did not require holy apostles, fanatic, inspired builders, faithful devout disciples," Vasily Grossman, in his book "Forever Flowing, wrote of Stalin's Soviet Union. "The new state did not even require servants—just clerks."

We churn out millions of these technocrats or clerks in elite universities and business schools. They are trained to serve the system. They do not question its assumptions and structures any more than Nazi bureaucrats questioned the assumptions and structures of the "Final Solution." They manage the huge financial houses and banks such as Goldman Sachs. They profit from endless war. They orchestrate the fraud on Wall Street. They destroy the ecosystem on behalf of the fossil fuel industry. They are elected to office. They are empty shells of human beings who stripped of their power and wealth are banal and pathetic. They are not sadists. They do not delight in cruelty. They are cogs in the machinery of corporate power.

These technocrats are numb to the most basic of human emotions and devoid of empathy beyond their own tiny inner circle. Michigan state officials, for example, provided bottled water to their employees in Flint for nearly a year while city residents drank the contaminated water, and authorities spent $440,000 to pipe clean water to the local GM plant after factory officials complained that the Flint water was corroding their car parts. That mediocre human beings make such systems function is what makes them dangerous.

The long refusal to make public the poisoning of the children of Flint, who face the prospect of stunted growth, neurological, speech and hearing impairment, reproductive problems and kidney damage, mirrors the slow-motion poisoning and exploitation of the planet by other corporate technocrats. These are not people we want to entrust with our future.

Theodor Adorno warned in his essay "Education After Auschwitz" that if we did not create an educational system that taught us to think morally and trained us how to make moral choices, another Auschwitz would appear on the horizon. Schools must teach more than vocational skills; they must teach values. They must, as Adorno wrote, teach citizens about "the societal play of forces that operates beneath the surface of political forms." And they must do this "without fear of offending any authorities."

We live in an age that has eradicated social and cultural consciousness and left us in a rootless, ahistorical, emotionally driven void. Whole populations in our poorest communities are poisoned or, in countries such as Iraq, murdered en masse. But we have no context for measuring human actions and human evil. We find our collective identity in childish nationalist cant and patriotic propaganda that bombards the airwaves, not in the cold reality of our callousness and ruthlessness. We do not know who we are.

"People who blindly slot themselves into the collective already make themselves into something like inert material, extinguish themselves as self-determined beings,"Adorno writes about the technocrat. "With this comes the willingness to treat others as an amorphous mass."

"The manipulative character—as anyone can confirm in the sources available about those Nazi leaders—is distinguished by a rage for organization, by the inability to have any immediate human experiences at all, by a certain lack of emotion, by an overvalued realism," Adorno goes on to say in his 1966 essay. "At any cost he wants to conduct supposed, even if delusional, Realpolitik. He does not for one second think or wish that the world were any different than it is, he is obsessed by the desire of doing things [Dinge zut un], indifferent to the content of such action. He makes a cult of action, activity, of so-called efficiency as such which reappears in the advertising image of the active person. If my observations do not deceive me and if several sociological investigations permit generalization, then this type has become much more prevalent today than one would think."

Humanity as an idea, as the philosopher Alain Finkielkraut has pointed out, is itself mortal. It can be extinguished along with millions of human beings. "Barbarism is not the inheritance of our prehistory," Finkielkraut reminds us. "It is the companion that dogs our every step."

"Indeed, one of the most frightening consequences of the Holocaust may well be that rather than serving as a warning to preserve humanity at all cost, it has provided a license to privilege physical survival over moral existence," writes Omer Bartov in "Mirrors of Destruction." "This may be one reason, along with the realization that mass murder has continued unabated since 1945, that such men as [Tadeusz] Borowski, [Jean] Améry, Paul Celan, and [Primo] Levi finally decided to put an end to their own lives."

We have turned our universities into temples dedicated to corporate vocational training. Most graduates of Princeton or Harvard have no more ability to question the operating systems of the corporate state than an inner-city boy or girl who is taught basic functional literacy only so he or she can stock shelves or sell fast food. We all have our place in the great machine of corporate self-immolation. We all are drones. The technical skills vary from intricate and complex to rudimentary. But the commonality is that we lack the capacity to measure our actions against the ideas, outrages and injustices of the past. We have ceased to be moral beings. The devil in Goethe's "Faust" grasps that the element most essential to the perpetration of evil is the obliteration of memory.

> Now it is over. What meaning can one see? It is as if it had not come to be. And yet it circulates as if it were. I should prefer—Eternal Emptiness.

We do not possess the intellectual skills—and this is by design—that permit us to question power, to see ourselves as part of a long human continuum. We have forgotten, or never been taught, that each individual must be seen as an ultimate end if we are to retain any human decency and hope. Once we depersonalize others, once we forget who we are and where we came from, we make evil possible. "Act so that humanity, both in your own person and that of others, be used as an end in itself, and never as a mere means," Immanuel Kant wrote. If we cannot think morally, if we live devoid of empathy, if our advancement comes at the expense of the other, if we lose touch with the wisdom of the past, we cannot rebel. And if we do not rebel we will sustain a system that will ultimately slay us.

People With Disabilities Storm House Building, Demand Boehner Leave Obamacare Alone

WASHINGTON -- At least 200 people with disabilities set up camp outside a House office building on Monday and occupied the halls inside, demanding that House Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio) stop trying to delay or defund Obamacare.

Armed with megaphones and banners, the protesters took over the steps of several entrances into the Longworth building and criticized Boehner for trying to attach a one-year delay of the Affordable Care Act to a bill to keep the government funded past Monday. Specifically, they argued that without the health care law in effect, they would lose the Community First Option, a program that provides matching federal funds to states to help people with disabilities use home-based care instead of institutionalized care or nursing homes.

"Who do we want? Boehner! When do we want him? Now!" they chanted outside the building.

"We're not animals," one woman using a wheelchair muttered.

Inside, dozen of others in the group went directly to Boehner's office and tried to enter in order to talk to his staff, to no avail. After being outside his office for about an hour, they began taking laps around the hallways, singing about "taking back my dignity" and "taking back my humanity." Many held signs with Boehner's face next to images of people in wheelchairs breaking free of chains on their wrists.

The protest, organized by a group called ADAPT, comes as the clock ticks down for House Republican leaders deciding whether to keep fighting to include a one-year delay of Obamacare in the government-funding bill -- and effectively force a government shutdown -- or allow a clean bill to pass in the House to keep the government open. The Senate has already said it will only support a clean bill, as has President Barack Obama.

A Boehner spokeswoman declined to comment on the protesters. Instead, she pointed to statements Boehner has made in the past couple days about the Senate needing to "listen to the American people" and delay Obamacare when it passes the government-funding bill.

Joe Tate of Austin, who came to Washington for the protest, said people with disabilities have long waited for a program like the Community First Option. He noted that even Texas Republican Gov. Rick Perry quietly supports it.

"In Texas, it's one of Perry's dirty secrets," Tate told HuffPost. "He pretends he's against Obamacare, but he supported a bill to push through the Community First Option." He pointed to the state's bill, SB 7 , which he said signs the state up for receiving the federal match for community-based care services.

As people carried on their protest outside, Rep. John Conyers (D-Mich.) was passing by and stopped to talk to the group. He eventually took one of their megaphones and told them, "Keep up the fight."

Here are some pictures from inside and outside the House building:

I hope this finds you well. I'm glad we had some time to chat at the holiday party. It was really nice seeing you and catching up!

I am thinking of internship opportunities for the summer and I am considering applying for an internship at the White House. I was wondering if you would be willing to recommend me for the program. Here is a link to the form (http://www.whitehouse.gov/about/internships/apply/recommendations), but I would be more than happy to draft the recommendation. Let me know if you would be okay recommending me and I will work on drafting a letter.

Thank you so much for your time! I really appreciate it.

Best,
Teresita

Subject: HUGE News!

Dear MoveOn member,

HUGE news: President Obama just appointed populist hero Elizabeth Warren to establish and lead the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau!!

This is the boldest step Obama's taken so far to rein in the big Wall Street banks. And it's a major victory for grassroots progressives who rallied for Warren.

The banks fought to keep her out of this job—and now that she has it, they'll do whatever they can to keep her from exercising her full authority. That's why we need to get the word out—to make sure she has the grassroots support she needs to aggressively police Wall Street.

So we made a video of Warren's greatest hits from her appearances on the "Daily Show" and a list of five cool facts about her. Check them out at the link below and send them to all your friends:

http://pol.moveon.org/warren_fivethings_share.html?id=&t=2

Huge news: Obama appoints populist hero Elizabeth Warren to lead the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau! Check out clips of Warren on the "Daily Show":

Top Five Things You Should Know About Elizabeth Warren

1. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau was her idea. Here's why she thinks this agency is so critical: "It is impossible to buy a toaster that has a one-in-five chance of bursting into flames and burning down your house. But it is possible to refinance your home with a mortgage that has the same one-in-five chance of putting your family out on the street."[1]

2. The Republicans are so scared of her, they tried to pass a law blocking her from leading the agency. Republicans in Congress and the big Wall Street banks have always been against Warren leading the new consumer agency. Republicans even offered an amendment that was widely understood as designed to block Warren. That amendment failed.[2]

3. She is one of the most prominent, successful and fierce female lawyers in America. Coming from working-class roots, she graduated from high school as a debate star at 16. She finished law school when she was nine months pregnant. And she has repeatedly been named one of the 50 most influential female lawyers by the National Law Journal and was twice nominated as one of Time magazine's 100 Most Influential People (among other honors).[3]

4. She spoke truth to power about the failed foreclosure program. The Home Affordability Modification Program was supposed to save homeowners from losing their homes but has left many deeper in debt than they were before. Warren used her position on the Congressional Oversight Panel to bring the voices of these disaffected homeowners right to the decision makers in the administration and demand accountability. [4]

5. She may have actual superpowers. She once calmed a crowd at an NBA game with her encyclopedic basketball knowledge. She explained the financial meltdown so clearly to Jon Stewart that he said it made him "want to make out with" her. And there's a viral cowboy rap video about her.[5]

Not a Gaffe: A Fundamental Misunderstanding of Iraq
Posted by Ilan Goldenberg

John McCain made a mistake this evening, which as far as I'm concerned disqualifies him from being President. It is so appalling and so factually wrong that I'm actually sitting here wondering who McCain's advisers are. This isn't some gaffe where he talks about the Iraq-Pakistan border. It's a real misunderstanding of what has happened in Iraq over the past year. It is even more disturbing because according to John McCain, Iraq is the central front in the "war on terror." If we are going to have an Iraq-centric policy, he should at least understand what he is talking about. But anyway, what happened.

On Katie Couric tonight McCain says:

Kate Couric: Senator McCain, Senator Obama says, while the increased number of US troops contributed to increased security in Iraq, he also credits the Sunni awakening and the Shiite government going after militias. And says that there might have been improved security even without the surge. What's your response to that?

McCain: I don't know how you respond to something that is as-- such a false depiction of what actually happened. Colonel McFarlane [phonetic] was contacted by one of the major Sunni sheiks. Because of the surge we were able to go out and protect that sheik and others. And it began the Anbar awakening. I mean, that's just a matter of history. Thanks to General Petraeus, our leadership, and the sacrifice of brave young Americans. I mean, to deny that their sacrifice didn't make possible the success of the surge in Iraq, I think, does a great disservice to young men and women who are serving and have sacrificed.

One problem. The surge wasn't even announced until a few months after the Anbar Awakening. Via Spencer Ackerman, here is Colonel MacFarland explaining the Anbar Awakening to Pam Hass of UPI, on September 29 2006. That would be almost four months before the President even announced the surge. Petraeus wasn't even in Iraq yet.

With respect to the violence between the Sunnis and the al Qaeda -- actually, I would disagree with the assessment that the al Qaeda have the upper hand. That was true earlier this year when some of the sheikhs began to step forward and some of the insurgent groups began to fight against al Qaeda. The insurgent groups, the nationalist groups, were pretty well beaten by al Qaeda.

This is a different phenomena that's going on right now. I think that it's not so much the insurgent groups that are fighting al Qaeda, it's the -- well, it used to be the fence-sitters, the tribal leaders, are stepping forward and cooperating with the Iraqi security forces against al Qaeda, and it's had a very different result. I think al Qaeda has been pushed up against the ropes by this, and now they're finding themselves trapped between the coalition and ISF on the one side, and the people on the other.

And here is the NY Times talking about the Anbar Awakening back in March 2007.

The formation of the group in September shocked many Sunni Arabs. It was the most public stand anyone in Anbar had taken against Al Qaeda in Mesopotamia, which was founded by the Jordanian militant Abu Musab al-Zarqawi.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And here is Colin Kahl in Foreign Affairs

The Awakening began in Anbar Province more than a year before the surge and took off in the summer and fall of 2006 in Ramadi and elsewhere, long before extra U.S. forces started flowing into Iraq in February and March of 2007. Throughout the war, enemy-of-my-enemy logic has driven Sunni decision-making. The Sunnis have seen three "occupiers" as threats: the United States, the Shiites (and their presumed Iranian patrons), and the foreigners and extremists in AQI. Crucial to the Awakening was the reordering of these threats.

This is not controversial history. It is history that anyone trying out for Commander and Chief must understand when there are 150,000 American troops stationed in Iraq. It is an absolutely essential element to the story of the past two years. YOU CANNOT GET THIS WRONG. Moreover, what is most disturbing is that according to McCain's inaccurate version of history, military force came first and solved all of our problems. If that is the lesson he takes from the Anbar Awakening, I am afraid it is the lesson he will apply to every other crisis he faces including, for example, Iran.

This is just incredibly disturbing. I have no choice but to conclude that John McCain has simply no idea what is actually happened and happening in Iraq.

Dear Trustees,

Below, please find a letter that Chad will be sending to wrestling letter winners and to the K Club announcing that Knox will no longer be sponsoring intercollegiate wrestling. This decision was a difficult one, so we previewed it in executive session with the Campus Life and Athletics Committee at the June meeting. It was the consensus of the Trustees on the Committee that this was the correct decision. See below for details and don't hesitate to contact Chad or me for additional information. The formal announcement will go out at around 3 pm, CDT.

Dear XX,

I am writing today to share with you difficult news. Starting with the 2015-16 academic year, Knox will no longer offer a wrestling program. This was not an easy decision to make and one that we took very seriously, vetting it with with coaches, the administration, trustees, and those donors who most recently have supported the sport by providing for the wrestling coach's salary.

While wrestling has enjoyed strong alumni and donor support, we have struggled to field a team in recent years. Two years ago, we were faced with a coaching crisis as our long-time part-time coach, Tony Islas, stepped down to accept a promotion at his full-time position. As we have done with other sports, we reached out to alumni to ask for their help in supporting a full-time position for four years. Our goal was to see if we could field a full and competitive program. With great enthusiasm, Chuck Porter '52, Jim Nordin '67, Jim Melville '67, Eric '00 and Janelle Curtis Eckdhal '01, Dudley McCarter '72, John Janicik '79, and Jeff and Mary Eckdhal (parents of Eric) graciously stepped up and made that commitment.

Our goal in hiring full-time coaches was to build stability in a program and to recruit larger numbers. Since that time, we have had two coaches who have each left after their first year for very sound and personal reasons. As a result of these departures, the College has had a limited amount of time to build the program to a point where we feel wrestling can be sustainable. With only six of 10 weight classes covered with current and incoming wrestlers, we lacked the ability to sustain momentum and success on the mats and on the recruiting trail. Many of the donors and supporters of the program feel that to continue the program at this point would not be a positive experience for our student-athletes and that we would have a hard time finding a qualified coach to take on such a challenge.

I'd like to thank wrestling's generous supporters for their passion for our program and their understanding as we've made this difficult decision, most notably, Chuck Porter '52. Chuck not only helped launch the wrestling program during his time at Knox, but he has also supported the program through to its end 65 years later. The College will continue to recognize and celebrate the lasting accomplishments of our wrestlers and coaches. In fact, long-time coach Al Partin and two-time All American Jaran Rutledge '08 will both be inducted into the Knox-Lombard Hall of Fame at Homecoming in October. We'd also like to thank Professor Frank McAndrew for his decades of service to the program as a coach, assistant coach, tournament director, and fan of Knox wrestling.

August 7, 2015

Dear Friends,

Before next week's opening of the U.S. Embassy in Havana, we wanted to say one last thing about last month's opening of Cuba's Embassy in Washington.

Three days after the Cuban flag was hoisted at the Embassy, it was lowered to half-staff, as Rosa Miriam Elizalde reported here . This action, consistent with Cuban protocol dating to the early 1960s, was a response to the official mourning period ordered by President Obama after the act of domestic terrorism in Chattanooga took the lives of four Marines and a Navy reservist.

Cuba's show of respect, so recently removed from the state sponsors of terror list, seemingly ignored by the U.S. press, should come as no surprise.

As we observed in the electric reactions in Havana to the video footage of President Obama shaking hands with President Castro at Nelson Mandela's memorial, and the euphoria after Cubans watched their President announce full diplomatic relations with the U.S., and ours quoting Jose Martí, Cubans have longed for a relationship that recognized their country's sovereignty and dignity.

This agreement is still rejected on principle by President Obama's hardened critics because he chose to negotiate with President Raúl Castro's government -- and assert he got fleeced in the process -- rather than wait for Cuba's system to collapse under the weight of U.S. sanctions.

But, as former U.S. Senator Gary Hart wrote recently , "We don't negotiate with our friends; we negotiate with our adversaries. We don't negotiate with our adversaries to do them a favor; we do it because it is in our national interest."

Precisely! President Obama determined that a respectful relationship with Cuba -- real diplomacy on issues like human rights and U.S. fugitives, opening up Cuba for American travelers and businesses -- had a better chance to realize our interests with Cuba and Latin America than the policy he inherited from our long, Cold War.

What about Cuba's interests? What does it get out of this opening?

Some in Cuba are as skeptical as U.S. hardliners. They suspect that the U.S. businessmen and travelers are coming to the island riding a Trojan horse; to them, regime change differs little whether it comes through the back door in the form of USAID urging an uprising or through the front door with a mojito in its hand.

President Raúl Castro has tried to reassure those anxious voices by saying Cuba will not "renounce its ideals of independence and social justice or abandon any of our principles, or give in an inch in the defense of our national sovereignty."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the same time, he is trying to manage the high expectations of Cubans who are convinced that normal relations with the U.S. will lead quickly to easier lives in Cuba, and respond to the low expectations of Cuban youth who think that nothing will ever change.

As Time Magazine wrote recently, "Over the last few years the Cuban government has relaxed controls over certain sectors of the economy, but reforms have been slow and halting." Factors undercutting opportunity, as the Miami Herald reported this week, include the dual currency system, restrictions on Cuba's self-employed, and lack of free access to the Internet. Cubans expected things to get better faster and sooner.

So, President Castro has to keep one eye on the clock -- he's promised to leave office in 2018 -and another eye on the polls. As the Washington Post reported this spring, 69% of Cubans ages 18-34 want to leave Cuba and live in another country, 75% of the same demographic want to start their own businesses, and only 15% are satisfied with the economic system.

Yesterday, the New York Times put names to those numbers in its story "Cuban Youth See New Embassy, but Same Old Drab Life."

"As much as the young welcome political opening and economic reform," the New York Times reported, such changes are unlikely to filter down to their lives anytime soon. "Change? My life won't change," Yunior Rodriguez Soto, 17, told the paper. "They won't let it happen," he said, referring to the Cuban government. "It's just how they are."

This is what makes what President Obama has set out to do so important.

Changing a policy that was written in Washington to determine Cuba's future was not doomed to failure simply because the Cuban revolution resisted it. It failed because it wasn't right.

The purpose of isolating Cuba and imposing stifling sanctions on its economy was to make Yunior's life harder. Dropping barriers, opening travel and trade, tacks in the opposite direction; the new policy respects Cuba's sovereignty, puts our country on the side of Yunior succeeding, and recognizes that it's up to Cuba's government to let change happen.

U.S.-CUBA RELATIONS

Foreign Relations committee threatens subpoena on Human Trafficking Report upgrading nations including Cuba

After Reuters reported Monday that political appointees at the State Department overruled the findings of human rights experts on annual report grading global efforts to fight human trafficking, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee held a hearing and threatened the Department with a subpoena should it fail to provide documents underlying more than a dozen disputed decisions.

Cuba is one of several countries receiving a disputed classification, including China, India, Malaysia, Mexico, Thailand, and Uzbekistan.

According to Reuters , analysts in the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (J/TIP), the Department's office set up to make independent assessments of global efforts to fight human trafficking, were "repeatedly overruled by senior American diplomats and pressured into inflating assessments of 14 strategically important countries in this year's Trafficking in Persons report."

Nineteen other countries were downgraded in the 2015 Report.

Sarah Sewall, Under Secretary of State for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights, testified before the Foreign Relations Committee, and "faced detailed questioning about the rankings for Cuba, India and Malaysia, in particular," the Associated Press reported.

Senators, dissatisfied by Sewall's testimony, threatened that the Committee would issue a subpoena unless they receive all communications related to the process of ranking of countries' human trafficking efforts, as The Guardian reported.

The 2015 Report improves Cuba's human trafficking classification from a Tier 3 state to a Tier 2 "Watch List" state, as we have previously reported . Tier 3 classification applies to countries that fail to comply with U.S. minimum standards; Tier 2 "Watch List" applies to countries that merit continued scrutiny. Analysts at J/TIP contend that Cuba's categorization should not change because it has not improved its record.

For over a decade, Cuba's Ministry of Foreign Affairs has rejected the findings of the Trafficking Report, claiming it distorts Cuba's role in human trafficking and forced labor and punishes Cuba for political reasons.

Critics cite concerns over possible political manipulation of the report. Senator Marco Rubio told the Miami Herald that "The decision to favor politics over policy has jeopardized the integrity of the TIP Report which has played a vital role in combating human trafficking the past 15 years."

Last month, when the State Department published the report, Sen. Marco Rubio (FL) expressed concern that Cuba's upgrade was "determined by political considerations" rather than its record. As Politico reported , "I find it difficult to believe that Cuba has been elevated this year from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List solely based on the Cuban regime's record."

Senator Bob Menendez (NJ), a Member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said "Upgrades for Malaysia and Cuba are a clear politicization of the report, and a stamp of approval for countries who have failed to take the basic actions to merit this upgrade." Responding to criticism, State Department officials told El Nuevo Herald that final decisions followed procedure "scrupulously," discussions were rigorous, and Secretary of State John Kerry gave final approval.

State Department spokesman Mark Toner said, "The goal here is to help nations improve their efforts to stop human trafficking and to fight modern slavery...And that's the goal, pure and simple, and we stand by the process by which we arrive at those conclusions," according to Voice of America .

Beyond the political and symbolic implications of the dispute, a Tier 3 designation could have further complicated Cuba's reintegration into global markets. Governments subject to penalties under Tier 3 face U.S. opposition to assistance from international financial institutions, such as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Much of the Senate panel's criticism, it should be noted, was voiced by lawmakers who oppose the trade agreement called the Trans-Pacific Partnership, a major 12-nation trade agreement that is a centerpiece of President Barack Obama's economic legacy. They say Malaysia, which up to now declined to sign onto the agreement, was upgraded despite its failure to remedy its human trafficking problems.

Major players in hospitality industry eager for permission to operate in Cuba

Tucked into its editorial calling on Congress to end the embargo [see A Final Word below], The New York Times reported that Arne Sorenson, CEO of Marriot, had returned from Cuba alarmed by the competitive disadvantage faced by the U.S. hospitality industry.

"With travel to Cuba now surging, existing Cuban hotels are full and hotel companies from other countries are racing to tie up as many of the new hotels as they can before the likes of Marriott and our U.S. competitors show up," Sorenson said in a statement.

More and more, hoteliers and other members of the hospitality industry, are clamoring for entry into the Cuban market, alongside the charter services that arrived first, the airlines lining up to offer regularly-scheduled commercial service, and the ferries and cruise liners that are angling for Cuba's approval to arrive with passengers on-board.

Much of this, however, depends on repeal of the U.S. trade sanctions.

An August 5 press release from Euler Hermes Economic Research reported that it expects the U.S. to become the main "economic winner" if the U.S. lifts the embargo on Cuba. The report estimates that the U.S. would gain an average of $1 billion in exports per year. U.S. firms Cruise Line Holding Ltd. and Choice Hotels seek to enter the market as soon as possible.

Cruise Line Holdings Ltd. (NCLH), one of three major cruise lines that account for more than 80% of global passengers, applied for permission to operate to Cuba, according to a Travel Pulse article from August 4.

NCLH CEO Frank Del Rio believes that "Once Cuba opens totally it's going to be a real windfall for the [cruise line] industry." Despite policy changes in December, NCLH still needs approved licenses from the U.S. Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) and the Commerce Department, along with permission from the Cuban government before moving forward. Del Rio continues, "We don't know the timing of when any of those will come through, but we hope they do before the year is out."

John Kavulich, president of the U.S.-Cuba Trade and Economic Council, tempered the enthusiastic aspirations of many observers, describing business opportunities in Cuba as "a process, it's not an action."

But, Choice Hotels International (CHH) president and CEO, Steve Joyce, voiced interest in doing business in Cuba in a CNBC interview this week.

CWU joins growing list of U.S. academic institutions seeking research cooperation with Cuba

Central Washington University was one of 12 academic institutions in the U.S. chosen to participate in a U.S.-Cuba partnership program administered by the nonprofit Institute of International Education (IIE), the Seattle Times reported on Tuesday. The six-month program will help universities develop strategic plans to partner with counterparts in Cuba and organize a series of bi-national conference calls and briefing papers to facilitate U.S.-Cuba cooperation.

Universities in the U.S. are also eager to engage in sports collaboration. On August 6, Coastal Carolina will send the first Division 1 men's basketball team to Cuba . The team will lead clinics for players and coaches in Havana and Matanzas, in addition to participating in community service programs.

First formal U.S.-Cuba aquarium research partnership: Florida Aquarium & National Aquarium in Havana

Tampa's Florida Aquarium and Havana's National Aquarium established the first U.S.-Cuba aquarium partnership focused on healthy coral reefs . They signed a memorandum of understanding early this week.

Thomas Hall, chairman of the Florida Aquarium Foundation, traveled to Havana in October 2014 to explore the possibility of a relationship, according to Tampa Bay Times. Representatives will meet for the first time in November in Cuba at the Tri-national Initiative for Marine Research & Conservation in the Gulf of Mexico & Western Caribbean and the International Marine & Coastal Science Conference.

"For over 50 years, Cuba and the U.S. managed marine life and habitats separately when it should have been done together. We know where each nation's boundaries lie but marine life does not. It is all one habitat," said Dan Whittle, director of the Environmental Defense Fund's 15-year-old marine and coastal conservation work in Cuba.

Whittle is a long-time proponent of environmental cooperation, as we have previously reported . He has argued for "good science, careful planning, and strong political will. In the case the U.S. and Cuba, it starts with exchange, and cooperation." Thanks to warming relations between the U.S. and Cuba, scientific cooperation is already expanding beyond ocean conservation to an orchid research project, as we reported last week.

Cuba opens its doors to cooperation on autism research

Monday, Autism Speaks , an American autism science and advocacy organization, reported on its meetings with the Cuban Ministry of Public Health to discuss collaboration on the study of autism.

Cuban health organizations to better track its prevalence.

In 2004, Cuba's government released a survey showing that only 1 in 2,500 Cuban children have autism. This reflects a rapid rise from the three years prior, but experts note that the global prevalence is closer to 1 in 100. The Cuban Ministry of Public Health is interested in improving its collection of autism statistics, and Autism Speaks officials would like to better understand how increased early detection, more doctors per capita, and free medical treatment assist with Autism treatment.

CUBA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS

Switzerland's instrumental role in U.S.-Cuba relations

Newly-released documents provided to Foreign Policy by the Swiss government reveal details about Switzerland's role as middleman between Havana and Washington for the last 54 years.

During the Cold War, the Swiss ambassador to Havana, Emil Stadelhofer, played an important role in de-escalating U.S.-Cuba and preventing a "third world war." According to the Swiss documents, Stadelhofer helped prevent Cuba's government from nationalizing the U.S. Embassy and converting it into the Cuban Ministry of Fishing in 1964.

Switzerland agreed to act as a "protecting power" of U.S. interests in Cuba at the request of the Eisenhower administration in 1960. Switzerland provided reciprocal representation for Cuba in the U.S., processed passport and visa documents, and exchanged diplomatic notes between the two countries when Interests Sections were established in Havana and Washington in 1977.

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations visited Cuba's U.N. Mission in July

For the first time in over 54 years, a U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Samantha Power, made a visit to Cuba's U.N. Mission in New York on July 31, according to U.S. News.

Ambassador Power and Rodolfo Reyes Rodriguez, Cuba's U.N. Ambassador, discussed the normalization of relations and priorities at the United Nations, according to U.S. Mission spokeswoman Hagar Chemali. Ambassador Power believes that diplomatic relations "will ultimately do more to help the Cuban people than the outdated policy of the past."

IN CUBA

Plans for papal visit take shape

Like Pope John Paul II in 1998, and Pope Benedict XVI in 2012, Pope Francis will say mass in the Plaza de la Revolución in Havana on September 20th as part of his first visit to Cuba.

The plaza, an iconic site in Cuba's capital, with its memorial to José Martí faced by a large portrait of Ernesto Che Guevara, was the backdrop of countless speeches by Fidel Castro, during his service as president, with a million-plus Cubans often in attendance.

Pope Francis played a pivotal role in the secret negotiations conducted between the U.S. and Cuba leading up to the announcement, by Presidents Obama and Castro on December 17, that the U.S. and Cuba would resume diplomatic relations. He was attacked by Senator Marco Rubio (FL) for helping to end more than five decades of open hostilities of open hostilities between the two countries.

role. Father Jose Feliz Perez, a spokesman for the Cuban Bishops Conference, told the AFP that Pope Francis "will tell all the people of Cuba that we need to reverse attitudes of hostility, indifference and contempt." Pope Francis is also likely to talk about poverty, emigration, and political prisoners during his visit.

He will give a second mass on September 21 in the basilica of the Virgen de la Caridad del Cobre. The Lady of Charity, who also represents Ochún to the Afro-Cuban faithful, was declared a patroness of Cuba by the Vatican in 1916, and crowned the patron Saint of Cuba during Pope John Paul II's 1998 visit.

The Guardian reports that Berta Soler, leader of the Damas de Blanco, a human rights group in Cuba, has asked for a meeting with the Pope while he is in Cuba. She recently met with Pope Francis in Rome and received his blessing to continue her work according to Vatican Insider . Colombia's FARC rebels, currently negotiating a peace deal in Havana, have also requested a meeting with Pope Francis .

The Pope will meet with President Raúl Castro; however no official meetings are currently scheduled between the Pope Francis and Fidel Castro.

Two New York Times pieces highlight life in Cuba: "No es facil" (It's Not Easy)

Changes in Cuban photography over the years are the subject of an exhibition that will open next week in Long Island, according to The New York Times . "¡Cuba, Cuba!" the exhibit sponsored by The International Center of Photography, features works by Cuban and American photographers spanning 65 years. Iliana Cepero, a Cuban-born art historian who helped curate the show, explains that "Cuban photographers, and this includes women, everybody has fought for something, very strongly and in difficult conditions. Women fought for having a space in this male-controlled field, Cuban photographers in general have fought for self-expression in a society ridden with censorship and prohibitions."

Another New York Times article describes how youth in Cuba understand and navigate their conditions. The author describes "an air of cynicism among the Cuban youth who see the ideals of Fidel Castro's revolution as dated as the battered cars that traverse Havana's streets." He observes that many young people welcome political and economic reform, but few expect changes to filter down to their lives quickly. He quotes many young Cubans in the article, one of whom explains "Everyone speaks revolutionary, but we live day to day."

Public wifi access outdoor in Havana

23rd Street in Havana, known as La Rampa (The Ramp), is one of five places in Cuba's capital and 35 places across the country that has been offering public WiFi at a reduced price since July 1. These outdoor WiFi locations, made possible by large Chinese-made Huawei antennas, have speeds of 1 MB per user . Earlier this summer, Google Ideas executive Brett Perlmutter was quoted in the Miami Herald as saying, "Cuba has a big opportunity to jump its [Internet] infrastructure directly into mobile phones and skip cable as African countries are doing."

Cuba hopes to increase Internet connectivity from 3.4 percent households with access to 50 percent by 2020. Demand for Internet certainly exists and frequently overwhelms the island's network capacity. The prepaid WiFi cards sold by state telecom monopoly ETECSA are usually bought up by "resellers" and sold for profit on-site. Cubans have also found ways to allow multiple users to share one card by setting up parallel WiFi networks and converting laptops or mobile devices into mini-antennas .

Cuban WiFi users have access to most sites, though government servers block some anti-Castro sites and Skype; most Cubans use Imo, a video chat program, to connect with friends and family abroad.

A FINAL WORD

The New York Times Urges End to Cuba Embargo: You read it here first

The New York Times published an editorial Monday calling on the "Congress to help make engagement the cornerstone of American policy toward Cuba." It cited the restoration of diplomatic relations and the overwhelming majorities in Cuba and the United States who want the embargo repealed.

The editorial made special mention of Representatives Tom Emmer, Republican of Minnesota, and Kathy Castor, Democrat of Florida, who introduced legislation in the U.S. House last week to lift the embargo, as well as Senator Amy Klobuchar, Democrat of Minnesota, who sponsored legislation restoring trade relations with Cuba last February.

All three lawmakers made their first visits to Cuba on Congressional delegations sponsored by the Center for Democracy in the Americas.

Significantly, the Times paid special attention to changes in U.S. public opinion, the bipartisan support in favor of repealing all trade restrictions, and how hardline supporters of the embargo running for president - Florida Senator Marco Rubio and former Florida Governor Jeb Bush - are isolating themselves from prospective Latino voters by opposing President Obama's opening to Cuba.

We made this case on public opinion last Friday .

A week ago, in the essay that opened this newsletter, we also pointed to the framing chosen by Rep. Emmer and Secretary Clinton, calling it the "language most likely to win the most valuable new converts to their cause: those least likely to change their minds because they are angry at Cuba's government or still hold out hope that after more than 50 years sanctions will finally begin to work."

The Times concluded its editorial by saying: "Hillary Rodham Clinton made a forceful appeal to end the embargo by noting that Cubans want broader contact with the United States: "They want to buy our goods, read our books, surf our web and learn from our people," she said. "That is the road toward democracy and dignity, and we should walk it together."

We liked that line, too. Admittedly, more people read about it in the New York Times than in the Cuba Central News Blast. But, our subscribers had a special advantage over theirs' - they read it here first.

Just sayin'.

Hi Kristi and Gang:

Great work. Here are my tweaks. (They're in red in the attached doc.) Basically, it's this:

Obama
1. Switch "Not up to the job" to "Too liberal." I think the latter is more likely than the former, and the former will be adequately represented by those who worry about his lack of foreign policy experience.

2, Add gay adoption (not civil unions) and his description of using 'a little blow' to the BHO attacks.

McCain
1. He's 71, not 70, years old.

2. Add his taking $61K from the Swift Boaters to the Say or Do Anything attack.

Again, great work.

Also, we got a Xmas sheet with the names of the people who work here. Same as on the card. There are 6 front desk guys, 3 of which I interact with a lot. 3 maintenance guys and Joseph Hill. How much do you think we should give them?

Hi Darren,

I hope you are well.

I wanted to give you an update about some emerging ACLU work on inequality – as I know that is an emerging priority for the Foundation.

In the coming months, we will release a major, first-of-its-kind national investigative report on thinly veiled debt collection tools that criminalize poverty. It is being compiled by our human rights research unit and will analyze this problem in more than twelve states, covering hundreds of incarcerated individuals and more than one million debtors (including individuals who owe medical bills, student loans, missed credit card payments, auto loans, payday loans, mortgage foreclosure deficiencies, revolving debt accounts at stores, and rent-owned stores).

For example, private debt collection agencies—which buy debts from hospitals, consumer companies, and other entities—sue debtors in small claims courts, often providing the debtor with little to no notice of the suit. They do this knowing that most defendants don't know their rights, and that these courts proceedings which are already manned by low level judges also provide limited due process protections, such as a right to legal representation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

There, they obtain civil debt collection judgments, and ask the court to declare the debtor in civil contempt, resulting in the jailing of debtors until they pay the unpaid debt. In fact, at the companies' request, judges often set bail at the amount of the unpaid debt, plus interest and legal fees, without determining if the debtor even knew about the lawsuit, let alone their ability to pay it back. Clearly, judges should not be doing the work of private debt collectors.

Our new investigation focuses on the egregious behavior of debt collection companies that are effectively usurping low-level courts to enforce dubious claims against poor people with private debts. This will be a blockbuster report and we expect future litigation and advocacy to be driven by its findings.

Some promising avenues for advocacy and litigation include: seeking judicial rules for courts that are abusing civil contempt; requiring that companies provide proof of the debt when they sell it to debt collection agencies; the availability of same-day lawyers in the courthouse; challenging civil contempt procedures in which bond or bail is set at the amount of debts rather than at an amount that would secure compliance with the allegedly violated court order; incentivizing private defense attorneys to take on debt collection cases by pushing statutes that would enable them to collect attorneys' fees when their client prevails; and pushing the FTC to crack down on abusive debt collection companies.

This project is the latest effort in the ACLU's long, rich history of fighting inequality—pushing to dismantle structural discrimination in many areas such as voting, education, and criminal justice, among others.

For example, as you know, in 2012 we filed class-action lawsuit against Morgan Stanley, accusing it of discrimination for encouraging a subprime lender to target black homeowners in Detroit. This landmark suit was the first connecting racial discrimination to predatory lending in the run-up to the 2008 financial crisis. As the New York Times reported in late December, documents produced in the case reveal Morgan Stanley pushed the lender into riskier and more onerous mortgages while dismissing questions about the ability of homeowners, such as our clients, to make payments.

We have also fought back against practices that involve incarcerating people for unpaid fees associated with the criminal justice system, like parking tickets. Across the country, in the face of mounting budget deficits, states are more aggressively jailing poor people for failing to pay their legal debts. This unconstitutional trend imposes devastating human costs, wastes taxpayer money, undermines our criminal justice system, and creates a two-tiered system of justice. The March 2015 U.S. Justice Department's report on Ferguson, MO., provides a horrifying glimpse of what can happen when police and the courts treat the poor as mere revenue sources.

To cite one example—and some good news—we brought a case in Georgia on behalf of DeKalb County teenager Kevin Thompson, who was unlawfully jailed for days because he was unable to pay $838 in fines and fees stemming from a routine traffic ticket. In this short video, Nusrat Choudhury, the lead attorney on the case, describes the plight poor people like Kevin face.

http://youtu.be/t966dPWgsGI

<image003.jpg>

Taking on Modern-day Debtors' Prisons - YouTube

Watch now...

As Nus mentions, Kevin scraped funds together week by week, but it wasn't enough, and instead of looking at his ability to pay—as is required by law—a judge sent him to jail. A key factor in this case is the role that a private probation company, Judicial Correction Services (JCS), plays in these types of misdemeanor cases in the county. Hired by the court to oversee probation, JCS charges probationers fees for collecting debt payments, which in turn increases their overall debt. When poor probationers report difficulties with paying, company officers don't explain that the court may waive fines, fees, or costs, or convert them to community service upon a showing of financial hardship. Instead, many JCS officers pressure probationers for payments by increasing reporting frequency, charging probationers with probation violations, and even threatening them with jail. Once charged with a violation because they can't pay, poor probationers are brought before judges, who have demonstrated a pattern of jailing people for failure to pay without making any meaningful inquiry into the willfulness of non-payment or the availability of alternatives to incarceration, as is required by law. For-profit probation companies like JCS operate in at least 12 states.

This is a vicious and unfair cycle that exploits and exacerbates inequality. And of course it's unconstitutional, and has been since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled more than 30 years ago that jailing people merely because they cannot afford to pay court fines is contrary to American values of fairness and equality embedded in the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

We are starting to turn this practice around. In the Georgia case, for example, the county just agreed to a settlement, which includes a monetary payment to Kevin and the county's pledge to make significant policy changes to protect the rights of the poor. These changes include the adoption of instructions for judges to avoid sending people to jail because they are unable to pay court fines; training and guidance to court personnel on probationers' right to counsel in probation revocation proceedings; the right to an indigency hearing before jailing for failure to pay fines and fees; and revision of forms to let people charged with probation violations know of their right to court-appointed counsel in probation revocation proceedings, and their right to request a waiver of any public defender fees they cannot afford. These policy changes will serve as a model in the fight against debtors' prisons in Georgia and across the country.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I look forward to keeping you updated on our debtors' prison initiative as well as our broader economic and racial justice work. In the meantime, please let me know if you have any questions or want more information.

Warmly,

Anthony

Dear John & Mary,

Have you been paying attention to the presidential primaries? I hope you have been, because Donald Trump and the GOP leaders right now are trying to steer us down a dangerous and divisive path.

No matter who becomes the front runner they have made it perfectly clear. The agenda they are pushing includes more of the do nothing politics that has plagued Congress recently; attacking women's health, opposing raising the minimum wage for working families, and refusing to confirm whomever President Obama nominates to the Supreme Court. The stakes in this election are even higher than before and we must send a tough progressive fighter to Washington, DC that is prepared to provide all Americans with a fair opportunity to prosper and to take care of their families. John & Mary not only am I prepared to be that fighter, but that is what I have dedicated myself to in the Maryland House of Delegates over the past nine years.

We can't afford to let Trump and the Republicans set the clock back on our progress, we must move boldly into a future that works for all of us and the least of us. This is what our campaign is about, and why it is so important we keep fighting. Because if we do, we are going to win. That is why your contribution today is so important. John,

The end of the year means checking lists twice! I'm looking over my records and I see that you gave $500.00 before. We're 3 days from the last FEC deadline this year, and we really need your help.

I've penciled you in for $250 before the deadline. Can I count on you now?

Come Wednesday, we're officially going to be in an election year. I've crunched the numbers every way I can think of but here's the bottom line: if we don't raise $30,000 by Tuesday night, we're not going to be ready.

My campaign is a grassroots effort, which means we can't fight without you on board.

Click here now before the FEC deadline so that I can keep fighting for us in Congress.

We need you now!

Thanks,

Sean

CBS' This Morning: The State Department released a new batch of Hillary Clinton's emails. They revealed that members of the Obama Administration knew she was using a private email. The commentator remarked that most of the emails were very ordinary. She only gave short remarks on the issue. Jeb Bush releases tax returns. He has earned $29 million since 2007, $8.1 million of which came from speeches. Chris Christie kicks off his campaign in Portland, saying a President needs to tell it like it is. Nancy Cortes explains that he will explain most of his time in New Hampshire to jumpstart his campaign because a plurality of people in the state identify as independent. Christie explained that he is a unique candidate because of his bipartisan record of compromise in New Jersey. Cortes claimed that several other former governors would make the same claim.

NBC's Today Show: HRC's second batch of emails released. Savannah Guthrie claims that there is little doubt that the Obama administration was aware. Top aides, including David Axelrod, contacted her through this account. Guthrie claim that HRC was often worried about fitting in to the Obama administration, and she worried about how much time she had with the President. Emails from Sidney Blumenthal also were released. Chris Christie heads to New Hampshire today to begin his campaigning. Matt Lauer interviews Christie asking about how he decided to run for president. Christie claims that he had the courage and ambition at this point in his life to run for president. Christie claims that his high school was the best place for him to announce his presidential bid. In 2012, many people urged Christie to run, and they believe that he missed his moment. Christie claims that he was not ready to run back in 2012. Christie claims that governors should be elected as presidents because they know how to run a state. Christie claims that he deals with a lot of compromise in his state; therefore he is more experienced than other Republican candidates because Christie deals with both parties, and not just his own. Matt Lauer asks about racial tensions in the U.S. Christie comments by saying that the first step to reducing racial tensions is to have the president reactive and show up at the area of the incident where racial tensions arise. Christie claims that President Obama talks but does not listen. Christie claims that he will tell the truth to Americans.

ABC's Good Morning America: Report that nearly 2,000 of HRC's emails as Secretary of State were released Tuesday night; Jim Avila reports; tease is that HRC's emails reveal her personality; Avila said there were no bombshells, said they revealed what the daily life of a Secretary of State was like; noted HRC's emails would be released every 30 days until three days before the Iowa caucus, guaranteeing a slow drip of information; showed footage of HRC saying no one had a greater interest in getting her emails out than she does; Avila said most of the emails were mundane, listed off emails about scheduling meetings, phone calls with foreign dignitaries, and that included HRC's sarcasm; Avila said one of the emails showed HRC fighting with her fax machine, said one of the emails showed HRC worried about missing a cabinet meeting; Avila said there was a redacted email titled "Hamptons", one requesting iced tea, and one on loving a Chinese carpet; showed one email from Jimmy Carter, several emails from Sidney Blumenthal; Avila said the White House apparently knew about HRC's special email, said Rahm Emmanuel and David Axelrod emailed an HRC assistant to provide HRC's email address when they couldn't find it in a government directory.

Sen. Arlen Specter (D-PA), who until late April of this year was a lifelong Republican , castigated his former party this morning on Fox News. Specter ripped the GOP for refusing to be a good-faith negotiator in the health care debate:

> On the Republican side, it’s no, no, no. A party of obstructionism. … You have responsible Republicans who had been in the Senate — like Howard Baker, Bob Dole, or Bill Frist — who say Republicans ought to cooperate. Well, they’re not cooperating.

Watch it:

Specter also indicated he would fight hard for the public option. “I’m not prepared to recede at all. I think the public option is gaining momentum,” he said. “I am not going to step back a bit. I am going to fight for the best public option.”

Conservative Media Attack Clinton Allies In Desperate Ploy To Smear Her Over Benghazi

Conservative media are lashing out at individuals who have worked with and support Hillary Clinton to attack her by proxy and rehash tired Benghazi smears.

Fox News has repeatedly -- and falsely -- suggested that the Obama administration's response to the September 2012 terrorist attacks in Benghazi, Libya was somehow politically calibrated. According to a Media Matters analysis, in the 20 months following the attacks Fox's evening programming aired 230 total segments suggesting the response to the attacks was motivated by President Obama's re-election campaign, while 105 segments linked Benghazi to Clinton's potential presidential campaign.

As part of their politicized Benghazi campaign, conservative media have repeatedly attacked Clinton's colleagues and friends in the hopes of weakening a potential Clinton presidential run.

Cheryl Mills, Clinton's chief of staff at the State Department, has long been subject to attacks. Back in June 2013, a Daily Caller op-ed by conservative activist Tom Fitton dubbed her the "Clinton cover-up expert," and accused her of attempting to "silence" a Benghazi whistleblower. (Multiple investigations have found no evidence of a Benghazi "cover-up," and the so-called whistleblower himself admitted that all Mills had done was speak to him in an "unhappy" tone.)

But now Mills, and her colleague former deputy chief of staff Jake Sullivan, have come under a fresh round of attacks. Earlier this month, Fox and discredited journalist Sharyl Attkisson hyped claims from a disgruntled former State Department employee who speculated that Mills and Sullivan were involved in the removal of damaging documents from a Benghazi investigation. The employee had no evidence -- he just "couldn't help but wonder" if wrongdoing had occurred. Fox blew up his unsupported allegations to claim that "Clinton allies removed politically damaging docs," while The New York Post labeled Mills and Sullivan "Clinton's minions" and claimed the documents were "scrubbed to protect Hillary."

Attkisson's claims were repeated across conservative media, including at Breitbart , HotAir , and Townhall. At the same time, the Media Research Center complained that more of the mainstream media didn't cover the story (despite the lack of evidence).

Earlier this summer, conspiracy theorist Aaron Klein's anti-Clinton book The REAL Benghazi Story attempted to smear another Clinton ally: former CIA deputy director Michael Morell. Klein suggested that Morell was "given" his new job at the consulting firm Beacon Global Strategies (co-founded by Philippe Reines, a Clinton adviser), "in exchange for his silence in the talking points scandal." Of course, there was no talking points "scandal": multiple investigations have found the talking points that then-U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Susan Rice was given ahead of media appearances following the Benghazi attacks were edited to preserve an ongoing criminal investigation, not for any nefarious political reasons. Morell, as a CIA official, helped sign off on the final draft, as did the intelligence community .

Other figures at Beacon Global, including Reines, Andrew Shapiro, Admiral James Stavridis, and J. Michael Allen have also come under attack from the right-wing press. The Blaze recently labeled the group "Benghazi Alumni," and accused them of previously participating in "harassment, demotions and politicized cover-ups." The Blaze piece, and a recent opinion piece in The Buffalo News by columnist Douglas Turner, both accused Beacon figures of hiding evidence about the so-called "stand down" order.

This claim is an old Benghazi falsehood; every single investigation, including the GOP-led House Intelligence Committee, have confirmed that there was no "stand down" order given to military or CIA personnel the night of the attacks. Military personnel along the chain of command have also said that any no such order was given.

Right-wing media's obsession with trying to tie Benghazi to a potential Clinton 2016 presidential run is habitually focused on throwing mud against the wall in the hopes that something sticks, but the facts won't allow it.

By Paul Blumenthal

WASHINGTON -- The Montana legislature passed sweeping campaign finance legislation on Wednesday that will require the disclosure of all donors to any independent group spending money on state-level elections.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The bipartisan Montana Disclose Act will effectively end the flood of “dark money” -- electoral spending by nonprofit groups that do not disclose their donors -- that has plagued recent Montana elections.

“Montana elections are about to become the most transparent in the nation, requiring those trying to influence our elections to come out of the dark money shadows,” Gov. Steve Bullock (D), who plans to sign the bill, said in a statement. “Our elections should be decided by Montanans, not shadowy dark money groups.”

The bill will require all groups, no matter their tax status, to disclose their donors if they spend money on electoral communications either targeting or mentioning a candidate within 60 days of an election.

“What Montana shows is that the issue of money in politics is really only a partisan issue in Washington, D.C.,” Adam Smith, spokesman for the campaign finance reform group Every Voice, said. “People can come together -- Republicans and Democrats -- and pass real effective reforms of the system.”

The path to dark money disclosure in Montana began in 2007, when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Wisconsin Right to Life v. Federal Election Commission that nonprofit groups could spend corporate funds on advertising close to an election that mentions a candidate, but does not call for their election or defeat. The ruling was a precursor to the 2010 Citizens United decision that openly freed corporations to spend money on elections.

The 2007 ruling spurred the creation of nonprofits that accept corporate money and play a role in federal and state politics. In Montana, Western Tradition Partnership, a Colorado-based anti-environmental group, took center stage.

Western Tradition Partnership (which would change its name to American Tradition Partnership in 2010) began spending money in Montana elections, largely in Republican primaries, in 2008 and continued to spend into the 2010 and 2012 campaigns.

After complaints and investigations by public officials, a box of the group’s stolen documents turned up in a meth house in Colorado. The documents, as reported by ProPublica and PBS’s Frontline, revealed an extensive effort to illegally coordinate with candidates in Montana and Colorado elections.

The revelation sparked an investigation in Montana, where the group was found to have violated election laws, and an outcry from politicians. The state legislature debated a bipartisan bill introduced by Republican state Sen. Jim Peterson to end dark money in state elections in 2013. That bill failed.

After winning the 2012 gubernatorial election, Bullock made disclosure legislation a priority. He had fought with Western Tradition Partnership in his previous post as attorney general. The group had challenged the state's centuries-old ban on corporate money in elections after Citizens United opened the door to corporate electoral spending, and Bullock fought back.

The state ban on corporate election spending was enacted after the mining magnates known as the "Copper Kings" spent freely from their corporate coffers to buy and sell political offices. Bullock argued that the state's unique history of corporate corruption should override the Supreme Court's determination in Citizens United. The top court in Montana agreed, but the Supreme Court sided with Western Tradition Partnership, ending the state's century-old ban on corporate political spending.

In early 2015, Bullock teamed up with Republican state Sen. Duane Ankney to introduce Montana Disclose Act. The bill passed the Senate on the first try and went to the House, where a bipartisan majority of 41 Democrats and 10 Republicans passed it 51-48. The bill was sent to the governor's desk on Wednesday.

The bill overcame opposition from the National Rifle Association and Americans for Prosperity, the main political vehicle of the billionaire Koch brothers.

Montana is the second state, after California, to enact dark money disclosure laws. New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman imposed similar disclosure rules through regulatory action.

Subject: The lies Big Oil's $120 million can buy

Dear John,

Big Oil has spent $120 million lobbying this year alone, doing everything they can to keep the clean energy and climate bill from coming to a vote.

Running nationwide ads with lies about the bill. Urging their friends in the Senate to spread misinformation on the Senate floor. Even getting Senators to boycott committee hearings!

Our campaign to defeat Big Oil's lies is gaining momentum – just last week the Senate clean energy bill passed out of the Environment and Public Works Committee!

But we still need to raise $44,579 more by Nov. 20 to sustain our campaign and get our new nationwide ad on the air.

Big Oil is spending millions to stop the Senate from voting on clean energy.

We need the resources to put our new ad on the air and keep our grassroots teams on the ground.

Help LCV raise $44,579 more by Nov. 20.

Watch our new ad and help us raise $60,000 by Nov. 20 to make sure LCV can sustain an all-out campaign against Big Oil's lies.

LCV has already launched an intensive campaign in key states to help our friends in the Senate push the clean energy bill forward. But to keep our campaign going strong, we need your support. Your donation today will help us:

- Launch our ad in key states;
- Maintain a full force of grassroots organizers on the ground in the swing lawmakers' states; and
- Generate non-stop letters and phone calls to swing Senators.

It's been one heck of a year – and with your help it could be a turning point for both our planet and our economy. You've already helped us pass clean energy legislation in the House. And now, together, we're on the verge of making history. We can't let Big Oil stop us now.

Our environment and our economy can't wait another year. Donate $50 or more right now to help us seize this opportunity to advance the clean energy bill in the Senate.

As always, I am deeply grateful for your support.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski

Jennifer Pae

배수진 FOR OAKLAND CITY COUNCIL • DISTRICT 2 裵秀珍

From Jennifer

Jaime walked down his front porch steps and we talked at his gate. He is middle aged, hard working man and lives in a modest sturdy home in the San Antonio neighborhood. Jaime is a small business owner running a contracting business for the local Oakland community. He builds local, hires local, and loves his city. Except, he hasn't been able to get contracts and keep his business running. He's been hit hard by downturn in Oakland's economy. Jaime is a contributing member of the local community and he wants to provide for his family, but he's having a hard time.

People often ask me why I'm running for Oakland City Council. The city is in a dire financial crisis, we are in hard economic times. It's not exactly the easiest time to be a public servant for the City of Oakland.

But when I meet people like Jaime, it reminds me why I chose to run. His voice and his story remind me of the rich diversity that is here on Oakland. It reminds me how we have a disproportionate amount of unemployed Oaklanders and a disproportionate amount of struggling people in our community. We need to bring City Hall back to being a voice of the people, with accountability and transparency.

I chose to run for City Council for people like him, people who have been left out by the system and are bearing the brunt of the burden in this crisis.

This campaign is proving to be one of the fiercest competitions I've ever fought. But I choose to do so to bring a voice back to people like Jaime. As a community organizer, I choose to put community values first. If these values are

Subject:	Meet Secretary Albright and the Senate's Newest Climate Champ

Dear John,

I am excited to give you the opportunity to meet the newest Senator from the great state of Hawaii, Senator Brian Schatz. On May 9th, LCV Action Fund will host a breakfast with Sen. Schatz and a very special guest, former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright. I hope you will join us.

Sen. Schatz was appointed to Hawaii's open U.S. Senate seat in late December 2012 to fill the vacancy created by the passing of Senator Daniel Inouye, and he is running in a Special Election in November 2014 to complete the term. He has proudly identified climate change as one of his top issues and has the credentials to back it up. In his eight years in the Hawaii House of Representatives, and most recently as Hawaii's Lieutenant Governor, Sen. Schatz helped create and implement one of the strongest plans for clean energy in the country with an aggressive goal to meet 70% of Hawaii's energy needs through energy efficiency and renewable energy by 2030.

As the "clean energy czar" under Governor Abercrombie, Sen. Schatz advanced investment in smart grid technologies and facilitated renewable energy projects, including the largest wind energy facility in the state. He is now bringing his expertise to the whole country as a member of the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

I hope you will join us on May 9th to meet Sen. Schatz and Secretary Albright in person and support the Senate's newest environmental champion. Please click here to make a contribution to Sen. Schatz's campaign.

Thanks for your continued support,

Gene

Debt Shall Have No Dominion

Nick Bunker notes an important point about the CBO's new long-term fiscal projections (pdf): The budget office has marked down its estimate of long-term interest rates, reflecting the growing evidence for a secular downshift in the "natural" rate.

This markdown has the effect of making the budget outlook — which was already a lot less dire than conventional wisdom has it — look even less dire. But there's a further point worth emphasizing: the CBO has just declared an end to the debt spiral.

You've heard the story: the more debt we have, the more we pay in interest, so the bigger the deficit, and the faster debt grows, until boom, we've turned into Greece, Greece I tell you.

Now, if you knew the arithmetic, you knew that this wasn't as clear as all that. Look at the annual change in the ratio of debt to GDP (which is what matters). It has to take account of growth and inflation as well as interest — actually, it's

Change in debt/GDP = (debt/GDP)*(interest rate – nominal growth rate of GDP) – primary surplus/GDP where the primary surplus is the difference between revenues and non-interest spending. The effect of a rising debt level, then, depends on how much higher the interest rate is than the combined effect of inflation and real growth.

So we turn to Table A-1 on page 104 of the CBO report, and we learn that for the next 25 years CBO projects an average interest rate on federal debt of 4.1 percent and an average growth rate of nominal GDP of 4.3 percent. And this means no debt spiral at all.

Now, wait a second, you may say: higher debt will mean higher borrowing rates, because people will fear that we're about to turn into Greece, Greece I tell you. That was the theme of quite a few analyses — for example, in the Greenlaw et al paper "Crunch time " (pdf), which estimated an upward-sloping relationship between debt and interest rates, and used it to claim that the US was near a critical point.

As many of us pointed out, however, such results were driven almost entirely by the euro crisis; high-debt countries that borrow in their own currencies haven't seemed to face anything like the same costs. And a funny thing has happened to the euro area itself since the ECB started doing its job as lender of last resort: not only have rates come down, but the relationship between debt and borrowing costs has become much flatter. The figure shows gross debt as a percentage of GDP for euro area countries in June 2012 and June 2014; what a different "whatever it takes" makes!

I don't want to say that debt doesn't matter at all. But it clearly matters a lot less than the fearmongers tried to tell us.

I will certainly spread the word to welcome your NJ State Chair John Currie and leadership team to our Granite State. We are grateful for the help in support of Hillary as we join together to elect Hillary our next President of the United States. Subject:	36 Days - PAO's Future
Attachments:	36 days memo.doc

With thirty-six days left to go, it seems appropriate to look ahead to Progressive Accountability's final four weeks and beyond. Both of you have at times asked me to think through what I might recommend next. This memo outlines the possible work space for Progressive Accountability (PAO) in two post-November scenarios and details the preparations underway for Progressive Accountability's approaching close-out.

A Whole New World –Outside Pressure to Set a Progressive Agenda

With a progressive administration in power, the role of the progressive community is likely to shift to focus on driving a progressive legislative agenda. The obstacles facing the next administration are incredibly challenging and will require talent and leadership both inside and outside the government. Rapid response communications and coordinated progressive messaging efforts, like those done by PAO, will be an important part of efforts to fix the economy, end the war in Iraq, create energy independence and reform health care.

In short, if there is a Democratic administration, there is still the need for the type of rapid response work that PAO does, but it is not critical that these efforts take the form of a stand alone organization like PAO. Instead, this work could be continued by placing individual staff in key organizations leading issue campaigns, or breaking-off parts of PAO like –"big campaign network." For example, are any of the organizations setting the progressive agenda on the war, energy , health care and the economy interested in taking over the media monitoring infrastructure that was built.

Doomsday Scenario – Defining McCain, Promoting Transparency

Should Senator McCain be elected president, there will be an immediate need for continued rapid response and framing of conservative values. We will need a research, online and communications campaign to define how McCain won and how he will need to compromise to give Americans the change they want to see in Iraq, on the economy, energy and health care. PAO's 164 McCain-lobbyists are likely to become leaders in a McCain administration. A lean operation of communications staff and researchers could be organized to expose McCain's advisors and their radical agenda. Using existing research, PAO is well-positioned to expose the role of industry leaders and lobbyists in forming a McCain administration. This team could be a stand alone campaign or could be back-ended into existing progressive operations (Americans United for Change, Campaign Money Watch, Center for American Progress Action Network or Media Matters Action Network or one of the leadership offices on the Hill).

The mission of this effort would be to frame the first actions of a McCain Administration; focus on transparency in the new government; and prevent some of the worst actors of the McCain world from becoming powerful industry advocates in the next White House. The effort could include a daily special interest watch to prevent Big Oil, banks, and insurance companies from driving the national agenda. New websites like mccainwhitehousewatch.org , palinsecrecyexposure.org , or mccainpressconferencecount.org could be vehicles for this data. Other micro sites like www.wherewillcharliego.org could be established to raise the profile of McCain's possible appointees. Here are some simple ideas of what this effort could do:

- Frame Win (November). Define McCain's win as the success of Bush operatives/Bush policies/Bush donors. This could include: creating process videos, working to get longer news magazine stories written.
- Frame the challenge for McCain. Work with Democracy Corps and other progressive pollsters on poll calls, poll memos to show the public is ready to end the war, reduce the cost of health care, and chart a course for energy independence. Research on McCain's campaign policy statements could be turned into a map of McCain's "promises" that he should be held accountable for.
- Appointee Watch Campaign. Work with Campaign Money Watch or Public Citizen to research and review key junior and senior-level McCain appointments. Release reports on number of industry representatives joining the government. Plant early news stories about why Rick Davis, Charlie Black and others should not work in the White House due to their conflicts of interest with certain policy areas. Use this transparency campaign to push for greater legislative reform that progressives can lead on. A component part of this effort could be to track the number of Bush appointees who are also working for McCain and to work to define conservatism through Bush and McCain.
- Open Media Watch. Given how closed-off McCain and Palin have become from the press, we need to establish an effort to keep pressure on the media to cover McCain and Palin. This could include keeping press conference counts, tracking interviews, and working with Media Matters and others to force the new administration to be more transparent than Bush in sharing facts with the press. This project would include an effort to increase transparency at every branch of government.

Closing Down PAO

We already have a tentative close-down schedule in place. The office lease is up at the end of December, there is an effort to get the furniture returned the first week of December. The original budget has staff paid through November.

Staff

I will have updated staff resumes for all of the staff by October 5th. I will also work with both organizations human resource departments to map out a check-list for closing down. I know that some staff have already had offers for their next positions, but I would like to provide clear guidance to them in their job searches. I would also like to see that key staff leaders are located in positions that benefit the larger progressive movement. *It would be helpful to have a sense of which if any staff CAPAF or Media Matters might be interested in pursuing.* For example, does Media Matters have an interest in assuming the tracking/media monitoring team whole sale?

Although progressive institution building is very important, the role PAO has most successful in is making some institutions (AFL, Campaign Money Watch, NSN, Planned Parenthood, Sierra Club) organize and coordinate together like a movement or a campaign. The goal of "defining Senator McCain's policies" provided a joint agenda and a common purpose. Because PAO has no other agenda of its own and because PAO provided its research and video services to other groups, it was able to garner a highly open level of coordination. This has been one of PAO's key contributions and can possibly be sustained simply through fostering a space for institutional leaders to work on a common agenda. It will be difficult to maintain this focus without Senator McCain's policies as an anchor, but it is not impossible. Here are a few recommendations for post-election "movement" coordination:

- Continue "big campaign" email network. Is either of your organizations interested in keeping the "big campaign" network going? Is there a way to build out a structure to keep the research and communications coordination efforts among groups going?
- Foster meetings/fellowships/retreats to map out a shared agenda among active progressive organizations and the hill.

I will work over the next few weeks to survey partners on their needs and solicit ideas for further coordination and communications planning.

Maintaining, Selling-Gifting PAO Video/Research Assets

Much of the technical infrastructure of PAO is held by PMUSA. But, much of the intellectual property now resides with PAO. We have research files on the Republican presidential candidates who never made it: Guiliani, Huckabee, and Romney – these include DVDs of hours of footage and complete research books. I suggest we work to house these research assets with multiple key progressive institutions. Although copies of most of the tracking footage is public, there are hard drives which backup more than year's worth of video tracking which are not public. I would like to make sure that this material is legally transferred to a group/groups that will keep them for future use.

Email, Document/File Policy

CAPAF and Media Matters have different policies about material retention. I could use assistance in writing up a specific legal property memo and perhaps IT assistance in getting email files and hard drives taken care of. I think that PMUSA will like try to sell off the equipment, thus it is particularly important to me that we are consistent with staff about the rules around keeping research materials and old emails.

Thank you again for taking the time out to meet me this week. I really enjoyed our chat and meeting Celia, as well as saying hello to Denis.

I had a meeting with Mario Diaz Balart today who tells me the re whipping is not going well in terms of votes. He says that they really have been hurt by the Cantor loss. He still has some additional votes to review.

He Is interested in proceeding. We have agreed to cohost a meeting of conservative leaders likely the week of July 7 in DC for him to lay out his concepts. Hopefully we can gauge reaction after that meeting as well. I will let you know what I am up to. If you have any suggestions for me please feel free to share them.

Madame Secretary,

Good evening! Three small pieces of business I wanted to flag for you:

1. Retreats: Joel, Jim, and Mandy will now be participating with us at Sunday's retreat meeting. Elan finished his modelling surveys in IA and NH, so we should be able to really dig into our path to victory in both states, as well as align on the core strategy. We're still keeping our date on the 19th as well to polish things up for you.

2. TV Ads: We got results back on the eight spots we tested. The good news is that they all tested very well...there wasn't a tremendous amount of separation between them, but the team is going to dig into the data a little deeper. I thought it would be good for Jim, Joel, Mandy, Binder, Anzalone, John, Oren and I to get on the phone with you next week to discuss the results. I've attached the topline results and a link to the ads is below.

3. Family briefing: John talked with President Clinton earlier this week about catching up on the campaign. John and I thought we'd meet with him and Chelsea next week to update them on where things stand and ensure they have full visibility into the campaign operation, if you're comfortable with that.

Let us know if you have any questions.
Robby

Friend,

The Chicago Tribune hosted a joint candidate interview earlier today.

For a lot of people, this was their first chance to see the Governor and Bruce Rauner go head-to-head -- and today, we caught a glimpse of the real Rauner.

Anyone who missed it needs to know:

Fraud, accounting scandals, and abuse have run rampant at companies Rauner owned -- yet he refuses to take responsibility for any of it.

Share the video below on Facebook or Twitter to get the word out:

As Governor Quinn said, this is someone who made a fortune on the misfortune of others. It's brazen for Rauner to claim the buck doesn't stop with him, and we're not going to let him get away with it.

If you're the chief executive, you need to take responsibility for what happens on your watch, and take action to fix it. The people of Illinois deserve nothing less.

Thanks for helping get the word out.

Point taken, John, and I agree with the sentiment that this too imortant an issue to have discord moving forward. But the optimist in me wants to believe that two people as capable as Chris and Jeanne can't work this out. Restarting the process with others in the lead policy roles seems too much of a step back.

I haven't read the latest so-called "final" draft, but will try to do so tonight. The fact that she sent it directly to you and Chris Lu gives me pause. (My education and immigration team leaders would not do that.) Much of this, of course, is traceable to how the membership of the health team came about. (Water under the bridge.) Part of it is also that I've tried to be exceptionally light-handed given your relationships and Daschle's stature. Perhaps you instructed Jeanne to proceed this way, although that would be uncharacteristic of you. I assume not.

John,
Great speaking with you yesterday. And I much look forward to our getting together in the weeks ahead in Brooklyn. As we discussed, I am attaching my daughter, Abigail's resume. Parental pride aside, she is whip smart, high energy, committed to Hillary's election and has a good social compass. When I asked her for her resume, I learned that through my old friend, Bobby Raymar, a law school classmate of Hillary's and mine, Bobby had reached out to Ed Meir. Ed put Abigail in touch with Jared Mueller. I assume this is the right fellow. In any case, Jared and Abigail are to speak Sunday I believe.

Thanks again for taking my call. As you know, anything I can do to help on the campaign I will. I have a very good set of connections with the Minority Bankers, CDFIs and community bankers around the country as well as the civil rights groups as a result of the lending discrimination cases I brought and the CRA reforms I championed when I was in office, as well as some pro-bono work with them since. My ties with larger financials is also excellent, though prying many of them away from their Republican leanings is hard. But I am prepared to try.
Warm regards,
Gene

CLINTON CALLS ON SECRETARY OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT TO ENSURE PLAN TO REPLACE NEW ORLEANS PUBLIC HOUSING

WASHINGTON, DC—Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton today called on Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Alphonso Jackson to devise a clear and comprehensive strategy to replace public housing in New Orleans. Senator Clinton's call comes following a decision by the New Orleans City Council to demolish 4,500 units of public housing. Since the tragedies of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita and in the wake of the Bush Administration's failed response, Senator Clinton has been a vocal and tireless advocate for those struggling to rebuild their community and their lives.

"The people of New Orleans — especially minorities and low-income residents — have been the victims of poor federal planning in the past. HUD cannot allow this to be yet another example," Senator Clinton wrote.

In a letter to HUD Secretary Jackson, Senator Clinton noted the need to confront the challenge of affordable housing not just in New Orleans, but nationwide. She called for HUD to implement a clear national strategy to ensure that our stock of affordable housing is not dwindling and that transitions from older public housing to new developments do not leave families of modest means without affordable homes. As part of that national approach, Senator Clinton underscored that HUD should certify before any demolition of public housing that there is an adequate stock of replacement public housing and emphasized that local residents should have a voice in these decisions.

A copy of Senator Clinton's letter follows:

Secretary Alphonso Jackson
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development
451 7th Street, S.W.
Washington, DC 20410

Dear Secretary Jackson:

Yesterday, the New Orleans City Council approved plans proposed by the Department of Housing and Urban Development to demolish 4,500 units of public housing in New Orleans. I applaud the City Council's commitment to improving the safety and quality of the city's affordable housing stock. But I firmly believe that any plan by your Department to destroy public housing units should be accompanied by an adequate plan to replace them. Replacing 4,500 units with a significantly smaller number of market rate rental units is not acceptable.

I therefore urge you to take the following steps before HUD proceeds with demolition:

- Ensure that there are affordable, livable units for displaced low-income residents and work with state and local authorities to accelerate and expand efforts to make affordable housing ready for immediate occupancy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Establish a firm, precise timetable for when and where new affordable housing developments will be ready.

- Complete the promised survey of displaced residents to understand present living conditions and to determine the level of need.

As you know, we must confront the challenge of affordable housing not just in New Orleans, but nationwide. This is an important economic and social issue. It is also a matter of civil rights – many of our current challenges can be traced to past policies that had a disproportionate negative impact on minority communities. As we strive across the country to replace blighted housing complexes with livable and prosperous mixed-use residential communities, HUD must implement a clear national strategy to ensure that our stock of affordable housing is not dwindling and that transitions from older public housing to new developments do not leave families of modest means without affordable homes. As part of that national approach, HUD should certify before any demolition of public housing that there is an adequate stock of replacement public housing. And local residents should have a voice in these decisions.

The people of New Orleans — especially minorities and low-income residents — have been the victims of poor federal planning in the past. HUD cannot allow this to be yet another example. I look forward to working with you on these critically important issues.

Sincerely,
Hillary Rodham Clinton

Subject: China

John:

Talked to Eryn and know you were out on Friday. Let me just give you the key elements coming out of the Paulson Institute clean energy finance seminar in China, for ease of reference.

Bottom-line: Chinese were engaged, focused, and positive about the suite of ideas for clean energy finance. I briefed both sets of USG activities aimed at overcoming the first/tech development valley of death (grants, ARPA-E, hubs, EFRCs, etc.) as well as US-Chinese cooperation in that space through CERC and the second/ commercialization valley of death (loan program leading to first grid-scale deployment of PV, CSP, largest wind farm, etc.). MacWilliams did a great job explaining current programs and successes achieved.

Ma Jun, of the People's Bank of China, laid out an ambitious agenda of tools to use to promote clean energy finance, including ideas such as green bank, policy support (e.g., green bonds), infrastructure support (e.g., by lowering cost of capital), and legal reform (e.g., consumer protections, enforcing environmental laws by holding banks accountable for climate effects of projects they finance). Discussion embraced state-owned enterprises, private enterprise, and public private partnerships. The Chinese Investment Corp was also represented.

Sandalow came up with the idea of advancing these ideas via a Track 1-1/2 dialogue, and when we can speak I can flesh that out a bit. But that is the thumbnail of the results and, as I said, Hank wanted to be sure you get a quick download. Thanks again for your guidance and support.

BTW had a message from Melanie Hart from CAP about China, and will close the loop with her as well.

Best,

Dan

Just wanted to thank and congratulate you for the tremendous contributions you made to the president and to the Nation in your most recent tour in government. You made a huge difference on so many issues that matter, and as always you managed it with grace and good humor. The dinner you and Mary hosted for the big data team was just one of the typically generous things you did.

And your efforts will continue to bear fruit, as you started a lot of great things in motion. The upcoming Paulson institute seminar in China is only the most recent example.

Hope you get at least some down time. And as I said before if I can help in any way on energy and security issues please let me know.

All best

Dan

-- Ed Henry reports on HRC email status. Reports that at the State Department yesterday, John Kirby was pressed on whether there would be more emails released pertaining to Benghazi since there were none released thus far which included communication between HRC and Chris Stevens. Shows clip of Kirby saying that there may not be correspondence between the two in specific groups of emails. Henry says there could be more Benghazi emails in sections of HRC emails that have not yet been sorted by the State Department. Mentions that HRC's campaign has long dismissed the legitimacy of the email controversy and shows The Briefing website's section on facts about the emails. Discusses the content of the website saying that it argues in part that HRC was not lying when she said in her CNN interview that she had never had a subpoena because she was not referring to the case of Gowdy, but instead of the 2014 State Department request for her to preserve official email. Republicans note that this does not explain why Sid Blumenthal turned over some emails addressed to HRC that she herself did not turn over. Shows quote from democrats on the review panel saying, "it appears that much of the select committee's work has been shelved while Republicans pursue every possible attack against Secretary Clinton." Gowdy's team responded that they would not still be investigating if HRC hadn't saved her emails on a private server. Jonathan Alter says that it is a very important move and, other than not intervening in Rwanda, says this is the first time WJC has apologized for something. Says that it is very well received when politicians do this. Al Sharpton says many will say he's doing it to help HRC's campaign. Notes that one of HRC's first policy speeches on the campaign was about criminal justice. Shows clip of HRC saying there is something profoundly wrong when African American men are far more likely to be stopped and searched and sentenced to longer prison terms and calling for an end to the era of mass incarceration. Clarence Page says it's become a bipartisan issue with both parties wanting to make some moves on this issue and Obama, WJC and HRC are on the right track. -- Commentary on release of Donald Trump's financial information. Wolf Blitzer notes that there are some discrepancies in the amount of wealth he has said he has in the past. Notes that the fact that Trump is filing this information shows that he is very much in the race. Gloria Borger comments on the different ways in which candidates talk about their wealth. Said it was a big problem for Mitt Romney and after HRC said that the Clintons were dead broke upon leaving the White House, she had to back track and say they were actually wealthier than most people. Borger says Trump is in no way apologizing for his wealth. Idea is that his wealth equals success, and he is running on the idea that he will bring that success to people. Says it is shocking that he is doing this right now when income inequality is a hot button issues. Attachments:	2016-02-27 SC Primary Remarks - 12am.docx

Team, here is a draft for Tuesday night's remarks after the South Carolina primary. It builds on what worked in Nevada, but reverses the order to give more prominence to the "we're all in this together and all have to do our part" section. You'll see prominent placement for the Mothers of the Movement, Flint, and our favorite corporate villains. It's also infused with a bit more "love & kindness," to elevate the tone of a week defined by Republican mud wrestling.
Please send me any comments or concerns.

I just had a cup of coffee, which sometimes leads to overexcitement and extraneous ideas or conclusions, but I wanted to offer up a thought.
The number of emails acquired overall jumped a bit yesterday, but we also had a evenly spread increase in email, referral, and social source. Could this have been because of the TX event? Was the voter rights email the source of email sign ups? Interested to know if we get rewarded for stiking it to the Rs. I should have asked on our call this am, but didn't look at the daily report until now.
Elan, Katie, Teddy? Thoughts?

Subject:	Keeping troops safe from gun violence at home

John -

I've spent a lot of time thinking over the past few days about the four Marines who lost their lives in a mass shooting at a Naval Reserve Center in Chattanooga, Tennessee.

I've thought quite a bit about the fact those Marines weren't shot and killed in Iraq or Afghanistan, but lost their lives here at home on a military installation. This isn't new. We should have seen it coming after the attack in Little Rock and attempted attack on Fort Dix.

And it's caused me to wonder what the Department of Defense and Congress can do to keep our men and women in uniform from falling victim to similar attacks in the future?

Right now, there is no doubt, ISIS and other terror groups would like nothing more than to keep shooting up military installations, and killing troops.

• They openly encourage terrorists to exploit the Gun Show Loophole, to buy weapons, legally.

• They take advantage of the fact that being on the No Fly List doesn't mean they get flagged in any background check. This is called the "terror gap."

• And they know that there is no consistency in force protection at many reserve units, or any recruiting centers, across the country.

This needs to change.

Add your name to mine: Call on the Department of Defense, Congress, and Governors across the country to make the changes necessary to keep our troops safe at home.

If our elected leaders care about the men and women who serve us in uniform, they'll correct these problems, now.

They'll pass a law to close the gun show loophole. They'll pass a law to close the terror gap. And they'll pass funding to increase protection at all military installations, bases, and recruiting centers.

There is no reason to keep allowing terrorists to target our troops, right here at home. To let another day go, without addressing these problems would be a travesty.

Add your name if you agree:

Thanks for making your voice heard. We'll work to ensure our elected officials respond to this call.

I wanted to make sure you were aware that we have a statement from the Fund, fully vetted and with Legal approval (attached)

The plan is to have an email go out at 6:30 pm this evening to donors.
It will come from John P's FFA account and each will be personalized to the invividual donor.

This will serve as our official notice.

In addition over the next few days phone calls and personal notes will be sent to those who contributed to the Fund thanking them for their support.

We will not send out a press statement or comment on press inquiries. I will send this statement out to the press contacts in your office so they are aware and fully informed.

We have been extremely senstive to future fundraising efforts for progressive groups who still need resources to do their work.

I cannot thank you all enough for your patience and help during this process.

When I arrived at the State Department in early 2009, I immediately got to work rebuilding America's tarnished global reputation and take on pressing challenges in nearly every region of the world. At the time, using a personal account seemed convenient. Previous Secretaries of State had used personal email accounts with no problems.

Subject: If You Want Clean Air and Water, Safe Food and Cars, Defend Public Protections

Center for EFFECTIVE GOVERNMENT

July 30, 2014

Dear John,

The air we breathe. The water we drink. The food we eat. The cars we drive. Most of us don't give a second thought to the basic components of our day-to-day lives, and we just assume they're safe. And we usually can.

Over the past century, America has developed a system of standards and safeguards and protected its people from a variety of public health, safety, and environmental hazards. These standards have improved our nation's quality of life and public confidence in American products and businesses.

Today, we released a new study, The Benefits of Public Protections: Ten Rules That Save Lives and Protect the Environment. It examines ten proposed or adopted federal standards from agencies including the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Food and Drug Administration, and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. In almost all cases, the benefits of the rules, when converted to dollars and cents, outweighed their costs.

Combined these ten rules:

- Save 10,000 American lives annually
- Prevent 300,000 cases of disease, illness, and injury every year
- Create net economic benefits of between $46 billion to $122 billion each year

Rulemaking is the way our democracy balances the public's interest in safety and well-being with private industry's priority of maximizing profits. It's about ensuring that we all breathe clean air, drink clean water, eat safe food, and travel in safety. It's about improving and protecting American living standards.

Check out the study on our website , then let your elected officials know how important public protections are to you, your family, and your community.

Thank you for being an active, engaged citizen.

New TV Ad: McCain Turns Deaf Ear To Iraqi Call for Exit Timetable

Ignores $10 Billion/Month Price Tag for Staying in Iraq while Gas Prices, Home Foreclosures and Unemployment Soar at Home

A new television ad highlights John McCain's intransigence on timelines for redeployment of troops from Iraq, even in the face of calls from the Iraqi prime minister to do just that. Early this week, Iraq's Prime Minister called for the US to set a date for withdrawal. The call from the Iraqis comes on top of similar American sentiment and amid concerns that Senator McCain is willing to continue spending $10-12 billion each month in Iraq while gas prices, home foreclosures and unemployment plague our domestic economy.

"This week, even the Prime Minister of Iraq joined the chorus calling for a timetable for the withdrawal of US troops, yet John McCain continues to promote an indefinite American occupation there" said Nita Chaudhary, Campaign Director for MoveOn. "He and President Bush seem happy to take potshots at MoveOn and Congress instead of providing the leadership Americans and Iraqis want to find an end to this war."

MoveOn will spend $100,000 to run the ad on national cable.

AD TEXT:	DOCUMENTATION:
In Chicago. In Saint Louis. And Seattle, the American people are demanding a timetable for withdrawal from Iraq. In Baghdad and Basra and Tikrit, the Iraqi people…	A strong majority of Iraqis want U.S.-led military forces to immediately withdraw from the country, saying their swift departure would make Iraq more secure and decrease sectarian violence, according to new polls by the State Department and independent researchers. In Baghdad, for example, nearly three-quarters of residents polled said they would feel safer if U.S. and other foreign forces left Iraq, with 65 percent of those asked favoring an immediate pullout, according to State Department polling results. [Washington Post, 9/27/06] A poll by the State Department found that 65% of people polled in Baghdad, 80% of people polled in Tikrit/Baqubah, and 56% of people polled in the South region which includes Basra, felt multinational forces should leave Iraq immediately. [Washington Post, 9/27/06] A poll by the Program on International Policy Attitudes at the University of Maryland found that 71 percent of Iraqis questioned want the Iraqi government to ask foreign forces to depart within a year. [Washington Post, 9/27/06]

…and now the Iraqi Prime minister are also demanding a timetable.	Bolstered by recent Iraqi military successes, Prime Minister Nouri Maliki proposed that negotiators include a timetable for the departure of U.S. troops in any agreement to continue the American presence in Iraq beyond the end of the year. [Los Angeles Times, 7/8/08] Mr. Maliki, facing opposition from Iraqi political parties wary of American intentions, told Arab leaders last week that he was prepared to negotiate only a shorter-term agreement. He said he would insist on a timetable for withdrawal. [New York Times, 7/16/08]
But John McCain doesn't want a timetable.	Addressing a town hall audience in Albuquerque, N.M., Republican presidential hopeful Sen. John McCain slammed Democratic rival Sen. Barack Obama's suggestion that the U.S. needs a timetable for withdrawal from Iraq. [PBS, OnLine News Hour, 7/15/08]
	McCain: "We are winning…And if we still adopt Sen. Obama's proposal for a set date for withdrawal, this very fragile success that we have achieved will be jeopardized. That's what Gen. Petraeus says, and that's what Osama bin Laden says." [Reuters, 7/14/08] Senator McCain repeatedly voted against a timetable for withdrawing troops from Iraq. [S. Amdt. 3876 to S.Amdt. 3874 to H.R. 2764, Vote #438, 12/18/07; S.Amdt.. 3875 to S.Amdt.. 3874 to H.R. 2764, Vote # 437, 12/18/07; S.Amdt.3164 to H.R. 3222, Vote # 362, 10/3/07; S.Amdt. 2898 to S.Amdt. 2011 to H.R. 1585, Vote #346, 9/21/07; S.Amdt. 2924 to S.Amdt.. 2011 to H.R.1585, Vote #345, 9/21/07; S.Amdt.2 087 to S.Amdt. 2011 to H.R. 1585, Vote #252, 7/18/07; S.Amdt. 643 to H.R. 1591, Vote #116, 3/27/07; S.Amdt. 4320 to S. 2766, Vote #182, 6/22/06; S.Amdt. 4442 to S. 2766, Vote #181, 6/22/06; S.Amdt.. 2519 to S.1042, Vote # 322, 11/15/05] McCain: "I believe to set a date for withdrawal is to set a date for surrender." He'll spend hundreds of billions of dollars more…	According to an analysis by Nobel Prize-winning economist Joseph E. Stiglitz and Harvard public finance lecturer Linda J. Bilmes, the war in Iraq is costing $720 million a day or $500,000 a minute. [Washington Post, 9/22/07]
to keep our keep our troops in Iraq for years and years.	McCain: "[M]ake it a hundred" years in Iraq and "that would be fine with me." [Derry, New Hampshire Town Hall meeting, 1/3/08] McCain on how long troops may remain in Iraq: "A thousand years. A million years. Ten million years. It depends on the arrangement we have with the Iraqi government." [Associated Press, 1/04/08]
John McCain. It's time to end the war and move on.

"MoveOn.org is repaying Barack Obama for his ideological position on Iraq by running ads that ignore the improving situation in Iraq. Obama and MoveOn were wrong to oppose the surge, and they're wrong to demand immediate withdrawal now. Rather than listening to MoveOn.org to set his strategy, Barack Obama should withhold judgment until he meets with our commanders in Iraq." – Alex Conant, RNC Spokesman

Eli Pariser Wrote An Email To MoveOn Members Claiming They "Bought" And "Own" The Democrat Party. "[MoveOn] members received an e-mail urging them to get involved in the fight over the Democratic National Committee chairmanship by contacting state party leaders. In a combative letter, Pariser wrote, 'Now it's our Party: we bought it, we own it, and we're going to take it back.'" (Kathryn Williams, "Can MoveOn Move On?," Newsweek, 12/14/04)

I talked to Tom Hamberger today as well..on background. Worked hard to separate da from ffa. Talked about da as building long term progressive infrastructure. Some oartners not political but we all want ability to generate ideas and engage america in debate about what's good for people in america. Solutions for 21st century.

I tried to focus him on FFA as a fundraising effort to support grass roots, community, issue bases organizations..... Encourage civic participation and the debate about critical issues. I talked about this was a support of democracy by educating and engaging voters before and after election day.. Said we were fundraising to support exisitng organization and build their capacity. I stayed away from Mattzie and messaging and kept focusing on grass roots voter engagement..

Professor Podesta and Judge Leon,

Below is my draft paper topic for Congressional Investigations:

Impartial Inquiry or Political Theatre? The New Normal for Congressional Investigations

- Contemporary attempts (and failures) to appear impartial
    - Lois Lerner
    - Benghazi
    - Planned Parenthood
    - Fast & Furious
- Modern investigations as base-appeasement
- New media as a trigger for shift in the investigation process

The paper will propose that contemporary investigations have dual, competing goals: a) affect change or hold bad-actors accountable, and b) incite frenzy among the majority party's voter base. Of these goals, only the first requires the appearance of impartiality to be successful. Ironically, the second may only be achieved if the level of political theatre is ramped up to a degree that puts the first out of reach.

Thank you,
Jamin

The 18 Eurozone leaders will meet on Sunday at 4pm, followed by a meeting of the 28 EU leaders at 6pm. Some members of the Eurogroup were pushing for a conclusion that would have given a mandate to begin formal negotiations; but other member states, particularly the Germans and the Finns, refused to sign on. Many countries remain concerned about the €80 billion financing gap identified by the IMF as Greece's needs over the next 3 years.

While officials have not acknowledged the veracity of the document, its contents match positions that the German finance ministry has taken in the past, and hence it underscores Chancellor Merkel's challenge in managing her own domestic politics surrounding Greece. Importantly, however, we are hearing that most of Greece's European creditors have now accepted that debt relief will be necessary in any new program, though reportedly a number of countries are concerned about the magnitude of this relief. The most likely option is extending the maturity of Greece's debt and further reducing interest rates, as Germany has indicated that providing outright nominal hair-cuts is a redline. For the Greeks, this will make passing and implementing reform more palatable, but for Greece's European creditors it will further complicate the politics of providing Greece with a third program.

Child Nutrition/School Lunches/Child Obesity: Kirsten has made combating child obesity one of her top priorities. The New Hampshire debate will prepare Dems to take on a radical right

The Democratic debate in New Hampshire, just days before the New Hampshire primary, is not actually about New Hampshire. The shape of the contest for the Democratic presidential nomination is set: after Iowa there is no winnowing of candidates to be done, coronation to be scheduled, or momentum to be generated. The outcome of next Tuesday's election (at least on the Democratic side of the ballot) will have little bearing on what is certain to be an extended battle in state primaries and caucuses for convention delegates between Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders.

Neither a comfortable Sanders victory in New Hampshire nor a surprising Clinton win would change the basic calculus. Sanders will have sufficient resources from an amazingly successful small donor fundraising operation, an army of volunteers, and unusually strong appeal with the youngest cohort, and a novelty in the arena that belies his age and lifetime in politics to carry the fight to his opponent. Clinton retains considerable advantages in the face of the emergence of a serious contender. She has the overwhelming support of her peers and the extensive Democratic Party network. She enjoys a close and supportive relationship with President Obama. She remains very popular among Democrats, especially with minorities and women. Her side of the generational divide is more likely to vote. And by a wide margin, Democratic voters and analysts see her as the more electable candidate in November.

Both candidates have weaknesses as well as strengths. While he caucuses with them in the Senate, Sanders is not a Democrat. His socialist identity, even of the northern European social democratic variety, comes with considerable baggage in an American setting. His views and positions cluster at the liberal extreme in Congress. His rousing call for a "democratic revolution" has a romantic appeal but can be jarring in a country known for its pragmatism, incrementalism, and skepticism of utopias. Clinton bears the scars of decades of political attacks and investigations. Years of experience campaigning and governing at the highest levels of government gives her unmatched visibility but familiarity can breed contempt. Public anxiety generated by economic and social dislocation has been channeled by politicians into an inchoate and angry anti-Washington, anti-establishment sentiment that sits uncomfortably with political dynasties.

Thursday's debate will launch a series of one-on-one encounters between Clinton and Sanders in which both candidates work to highlight their strengths and minimize or counter their weaknesses. But a much larger story about American politics is unfolding in this election, the culmination of years, indeed decades, of a radicalization of the Republican Party. It can no longer be credibly denied that the polarization between the parties is asymmetric. This has been apparent in Congress where Republicans have become intensely oppositional and unwilling or unable to engage in bargaining and compromise with a Democratic president, one whose very legitimacy they challenge. Now it is unfolding in a very prominent way in the battle for the Republican presidential nomination.

Sanders and Clinton understandably place their highest priority on winning the Democratic presidential nomination. But their differences have less to do with values and goals than strikingly different theories of policy change in American politics. The open question is whether their personal competition will sharpen or obscure the profound and consequential divide between the two political parties. This debate and those that follow will help determine whether the Democrats emerge from a spirited contest with an electable candidate and a unified and enthused party well positioned to confront a radicalized Republican Party.

New York Times – Paul Krugman
Let me be blunt: I don't know how the decision was made to release this "new" Piketty book in its current form, but it's not at all the book one might have expected. It is, instead, a slightly revised version of a volume first published in 1997, when Mr. Piketty was in his mid-20s.

Thanks a lot for talking. I really appreciate it.

One thought re the Edley framing of education. For me, the question isn't, will you make education a BIG issue or not? He could spend only a little but hold the line on NCLB and teachers and that would be okay. Or he could spend billions fulfilling 80% of his promises, but ditch the 20% that are reform, and that would be lousy.

As you know, I'd love to stay involved in the next phase on education transition, but I know it's tricky. Fortunately I will have an exciting December no matter what.

Thanks again,
Robert

Subject: John, can you make it to an event in Washington?

John --

We're almost there -- just 19 days left.

The final three weeks of any election, and especially of this one, are about one thing -- getting out the vote. The math is simple: if the folks who voted in 2008 vote again in 2010, then Democrats keep both the House and Senate and we can keep moving America forward.

You and I have to make sure they don't stay home. All over the country, in all 50 states -- and in Washington -- OFA volunteers are rolling up their sleeves and asking their neighbors to commit to vote this fall.

Can you make it out to take part on Tuesday?

Here are the details:

What: Vote 2010 Event

Where: Organizing for America - Washington, D.C.
430 South Capitol Street, SE
Washington, DC 20003

When: Tuesday, October 19th
5:00 pm

Yes, I can make it.

No, I can't make it.

If you can't make that event, see if there's another one near you.

If we succeed this November, we'll build on our past victories by continuing to improve the economy and get Americans back to work, fighting for clean energy, green jobs, and immigration reform. If we lose, the Republicans who have vowed to repeal Wall Street reform and phase out Social Security will take over our government -- and maybe even shut it down.

There are no two ways around it: to achieve the things we fought for in 2008, we need to win in 2010. And to win in 2010, we need to get out the vote.

Earlier this week, the President held a town-hall meeting with some first time voters from 2008. He told them our involvement in democracy signals "a reaffirmation of a central American truth, which is our destiny is not written for us by somebody else -- our destiny is written by us."

Please do what you can to come out and volunteer in Washington:

http://DC.barackobama.com/Vote2010Events

Keep at it,

Jeremy

John -- there are only two things you need to know:

1. Republicans have reserved a staggering $6,000,000.00 on the Arizona airwaves to bash Ann's record
2. We continue to fall short of our ad buy goal

Winning is simple: get the facts out to Arizona voters and get them to the polls.

But we can't do anything without your continuous support.

WaPo is writing an article-don't know when about "should HRC change her economic message" –
Will certainly try to keep the dialogue open with writer.

Abby-
I enjoyed our conversation today and sorry I had to cut out early. I thought it may be best to email you my thoughts since we discussed so many topics.
As stated, I do not think the Secretary should change her economic message because it is one that will work. She is running a 50 state campaign and thus her economic plan must be wide spread and cannot be one that shifts for the benefit of each and every state. Similar to the Obama '08 & '12 election and those before , the 2 bookends for voters will be the economy and foreign policy and it is very clear that the Secretary has the best plan. I will stay in my economic "sand box". If you think about her plan, she has been incredibly clear that economic growth is key to jobs and wages and highlights infrastructure as a key priority. For the Secretary infrastructure is not only road and bridges but it is also broadband, water treatment centers, ports, next generation GPS and social projects (like upgrading schools & hospitals). What many fail to realize is infrastructure is the fastest multiplier of GDP growth; for every $1 spent it yields a 1.6 times increase and for every $1 billion spent it is the best job creator with over 25,000 new jobs. Also, the Secretary is a staunch believer in utilizing public private partnerships such as the Port Miami Tunnel in FL or Research Triangle Park in NC –both huge successes. Just think about how critical infrastructure projects will be for Flint Michigan.
Now with respect to our conversation about Ohio , I think the importance of the TARP money being used for the auto bailout has been the most important aspect to the growth trajectory in this state where approximately $85 billion dollars was used (and as you know, the Secretary supported and the Senator did not). The facts tell the story and facts do not lie:
US Auto sales and Ohio unemployment rate are directly correlated (maybe more than any other state). Here is what you will see. In 2007, US auto sales were 16 million/Ohio unemployment was 5.7%, in 2009 10.4 million sales/11 % rate in 2015 17.2 million sales/4.8% rate. (I could give you each year from 2007 tom 2015 as the correlation is very consistent). The other big difference in many many states is the importance of the ExIm Bank on manufacturing and exports but especially small & medium sized businesses. Yes it is true that a lot of the gross dollars have gone to companies like Boeing, Dow Chemical & GE, but in 2014 (the last year it was really up & running) over 85% of all loans went SMEs and 3,400 transactions totaling over $5 billion in loans went directly to small businesses. So Sen sanders is wrong that this is crony capitalism , it is just the opposite it is critical for enhancing US jobs and making sure small businesses can compete on the global stage by having access to capital. (as an fyi -60 other countries and every developing one has an export credit agency). Now with respect to trade, I don't think you can build a moat around the US and stay globally competitive and I think her advisor summed it up well:
"The answer can't be to shut down all trade," said Jake Sullivan, Mrs. Clinton's senior policy adviser. He said the key is backing "smart and fair trade, where American workers get a level playing field with the rest of the world."
Happy to discuss or answer any other questions. AEnjoy the crazy debate tonight –will be like an SNL skit.

As a follow up to our call last Friday, attached is a spreadsheet with Laura's revised salary recommendations based on the parameters we set in the meeting. Also attached is a document showing the specific employee exceptions along with Laura's rationale. In sum, Laura is requesting 7 exceptions and the additional amount requested beyond the 2012 4% budget has decreased from $264,372 to $71,004. Please let me know if you would like to review these recommendations after our Executive call today or at another time. Thanks.

Subject: Book Discussion Wednesday March 2

Hi, everyone. I want to let you know about an event sponsored by our Center on National Security and the Law next Wednesday, March 2, at 12:45 pm in Hotung 5021. I will be interviewing and leading a discussion with Professor Bill Banks and Steve Dycus on their new book Soldiers on the Home Front: The Domestic Role of the American Military. I have attached a flyer for the event.

As the description of the book below indicates, this is an especially timely and important work:

"When crisis requires American troops to deploy on American soil, the country depends on a rich and evolving body of law to establish clear lines of authority, safeguard civil liberties, and protect its democratic institutions and traditions. Since the attacks of 9/11, the governing law has changed rapidly even as domestic threats—from terror attacks, extreme weather, and pandemics—mount. Soldiers on the Home Front is the first book to systematically analyze the domestic role of the military as it is shaped by law, surveying America's history of judicial decisions, constitutional provisions, statutes, regulations, military orders, and martial law to ask what we must learn and do before the next crisis.

America's military is uniquely able to save lives and restore order in situations that overwhelm civilian institutions. Yet the U.S. military has also been called in for more coercive duties at home: breaking strikes, quelling riots, and enforcing federal laws in the face of state resistance. It has spied on and overseen the imprisonment of American citizens during wars, Red scares, and other emergencies. And while the fears of the Republic's founders that a strong army could undermine democracy have not been realized, history is replete with reasons for concern.

At a time when the military's domestic footprint is expanding, Banks and Dycus offer a thorough analysis of the relevant law and history to challenge all the stakeholders—within and outside the military—to critically assess the past in order to establish best practices for the crises to come."

We hope that you can join us for what should be a fascinating and important discussion.

Best,

In 2014, the U.S. had its lowest federal election turnout in 7O years.

As a result, Democrats lost. Badly.

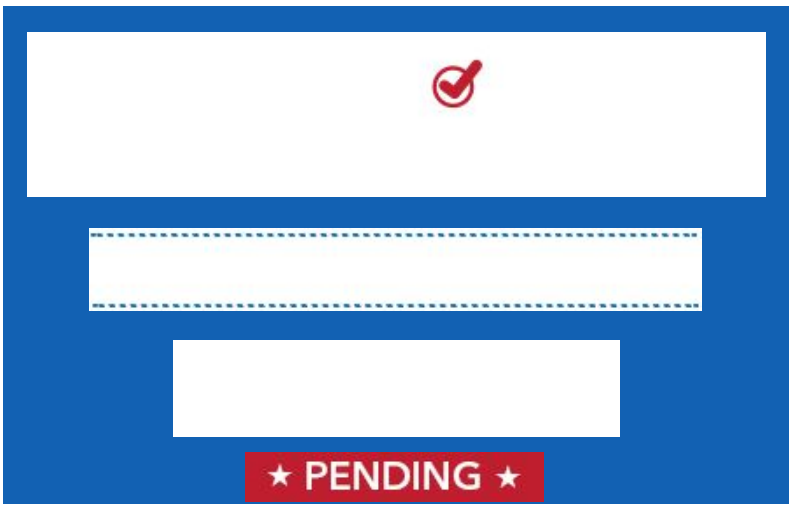

Three months ago, a group of Democratic campaign veterans from President Obama's home state of Illinois formed an organization with the mission to increase Democratic turnout for the 2016 election:

PROGRESSIVE TURNOUT PROJECT

We chose to call it a "Project" because low turnout cannot be fixed overnight -- this issue requires a long-term investment of time, resources and energy.

John, that means we need your support right now -- before tonight's November fundraising deadline:

Will you rush a donation of $5 (or more) to become an Original Member of the Progressive Turnout Project?

$5	$35	$50
$100	$250	Other

We're going to launch robust field campaigns in select competitive races where we can make a huge impact. But if we're going to win in 2016, we can't wait until 2016.

Your support can be the difference between Mitch McConnell and Paul Ryan controlling the national agenda, or Democratic majorities working with the next Democratic President.

The choice is yours, John.

Chip in to become an Original Member of the Progressive Turnout Project and help get Democrats to the polls:

Thank you,

RE: Apollo 14 Astronaut Edgar Mitchell requests meeting with John Podesta to discuss Disclosure

Hugs Eryn,

Dr. Edgar Mitchell asks that I write to Mr. Podesta and you requesting his meeting in Washington, DC with John to discuss Disclosure and zero point energy.
As John is aware, more than 20 countries including the Vatican have released top secret papers discussing extraterrestrial incidents on Earth over many years. The US has NOT participated in Disclosure, yet.

Attending the meeting with Dr. Mitchell will be the following:
Mr. Dan Hill, Catholic philanthropist
Dr. Michael Mansfield, Catholic retired Air Force Colonel
Mrs. Terri Mansfield, Catholic consultant replacing Dr. Rebecca Wright for Dr. Mitchell in this matter.

Because of his own background as a Catholic, we feel it is imperative that John be aware of the Vatican's interest in ETI, Extraterrestrial Intelligence, and in sustainability for our planet.
The Vatican has hosted global seminars on the repercussions of humans interacting with ETI, and how this will affect religion and consciousness.
The Vatican's Observatory is located here in Arizona, and its top astronomers including Father Jose Funes and Brother Guy Consolmagno, who have met with Pope Francis, have publicly stated that God's creation could very well include OTHER intelligent life, and that would mean they are our "brothers".

We work with specific ETI from a contiguous universe. They are nonviolent and in complete obedience to God.
Our ETI's connection to zero point energy is obvious in that their purpose is to guide Edgar's international Quantrek science team to apply their zero point energy research for humanity, to move away from the use of fossil fuels which are so deleterious to our fragile planet. Quantrek's science intuitive, Dr. Suzanne Mendelssohn, also a practicing Catholic, advises the Quantrek team as to the specific Tau neutrino which is the foundation for zero point energy, something CERN scientists have begun to study, as well as scientists all over the planet.

Because of the recent demonstrations addressing the overwhelming issue of climate change, and President Obama's own concern, we feel the timing is perfect to meet with John to map out a plan involving Disclosure and zero point energy.

After having met with US Ambassador Pamela Hamamoto at the UN Mission in Geneva on July 4, Edgar announced to Swiss media that he intends to return to the moon on a space ship fueled by zero point energy at age 100, in 16 years.

Thank you for letting us know 3 possible dates and times for our meeting with John, so we can prepare travel logistics.

Great – I am flexible Thursday so tell me what time best works for you and we will arrange a walk through. Please advise on whether you want me to include CBRE (our real estate reps) and Cushman Wakefield (GS real estate reps) in the walk through. I think it would be helpful but I wasn't sure if and how public you wanted to be about the Secretary's plans. Right now I have told them that CF is exploring expansion options that may require additional space so they know nothing of Secretary Clinton's engagement. Please advise. Thnx laura

Huma,

Hope you are feeling well. I wanted to touch base with you and set up a call for this week – a meeting would be great but if not at least a call – to discuss space. As you may know from the traffic btw Chelsea and I last week which included Bruce and Podesta, I had a meeting and walk through for the additional space available at 77 Water Street. They have an interested party (who today just asked for a draft lease – so that is moving quickly) on the table for part of the space so if we want additional space, we need to move quickly. Goldman, b/c of their relationship with us, is delaying the drafting of a lease for this interested party until they get a better sense from us but they cannot hold them off too much longer. I briefed John this am and then he and I met with Bob regarding CGI needs. It would be great if we could arrange a call to discuss the Secretary's needs for this week and I can have John and/or Bob join as needed. Michelle is copied here for follow up on setting a time for a meeting or call at your convenience. In meantime, Genzler via Goldman Sachs is awaiting our details to do test fit options. Thanks, Laura

Friend,

Bruce Rauner just passed a milestone. He's now personally put more than $10 million of his fortune into his own campaign.

That's right: the most recent $1.5 million check he wrote to himself bumped Rauner's personal contribution total up to $11 million and change.

(I won't blame you if you need to read that sentence again.)

We're up against an out-of-touch billionaire who can -- and clearly will -- spend whatever it takes to win. But I have some good news, too:

Right now is the best time to fight back -- chip in $5 or more before midnight tomorrow and your donation will be doubled.

Illinois has never seen anything like this. His campaign is pouring those millions into an avalanche of attack ads -- they've tripled their network TV buys in Chicago alone, and you better believe they're not going to slow down.

We can still win, but it's going to take everyone who wants to keep Bruce Rauner out of the governor's mansion pitching in what they can.

And if you step up right now, you can double your impact – chip in today to have your donation matched by another generous supporter:

https://www.quinnforillinois.com/doubled

Thanks for fighting back.

BENNET FOR COLORADO

Dear Friend,

Here in Colorado, the Koch brothers have been running attack ads since early spring. They're dominating the conversation and putting the issues that matter to Colorado families on the back burner.

If the Koch brothers' candidates win in Colorado this November, it will prove their strategy is working.

It's up to us to deny the Kochs a victory and undo the negative effects of Citizens United. Please consider making a $5 contribution -- before tonight's deadline at midnight -- to help us keep fighting.

If you've saved your payment information with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately:

Express Donate: $5

Express Donate: $10

Express Donate: $25

Or donate another amount.

The Koch brothers don't run a grassroots network -- they can write million-dollar checks without batting an eye.

We don't work that way. We raise our resources one $5 contribution at a time, which means we have to hit our monthly goals to stay on track.

At midnight tonight, we have to be at $25,000 for the month of August. Right now, we're at about $22,000 -- give $5 and help us get a little closer.

Thanks for your ongoing support.

Michael

The FEC deadline we're facing tomorrow at midnight is HUGE. Here's why:

- It's the first time Democrats are going to have to file an FEC report since the vacancy on the Supreme Court was created.
- Mitch McConnell and Paul Ryan both have come out in staunch opposition to filling the vacancy.
- Republicans and Tea Party radicals will be looking at this report to see if we've got the grassroots strength to elect a Democratic Majority in 2016.

John, if you want to stop the GOP from any more outrageous games like this, Democrats need us to hit our $50,000 fundraising goal before midnight tomorrow.

Subject: Bruce Rauner just went all in

Friend,

If there was any question about whether Bruce Rauner would continue pouring money into his campaign, he just answered it.

Not only did Rauner cut another $1.5 million check to himself, he's also funneling tons of cash into the Illinois Republican Party.

That's right -- Bruce Rauner is now almost single-handedly funding the Republican Party here in Illinois, and that could have major repercussions on races up and down the ballot.

All that's standing between them and control of the state is us.

Will you chip in $5 or more before the final big fundraising deadline?

If Rauner is going to be all in, we have to be, too.

It's up to us to hold the line not just for the Governor, but for the values we believe in.

Tuesday's fundraising deadline may not matter to Rauner, but it's critical to a grassroots campaign like ours.

We've got to come out of this last fundraising deadline strong. Donate $5 or more right now to make sure we do:

https://quinnforillinois.com/all-in

Thank you.

We will review a set of brand work that answers the question of seeing what "an outside game" approach would look like for a potential presidential run. As you know, we have a meeting with Secretary Clinton next week and your insights in advance will be very helpful.

I have 3 main agencies working on this. Only one is based in NYC so I am bringing 2 members of that agency with me. Kevin is the executive creative director and Matt is the brand strategist. Together we will share a set of work that has been created by the 3 agencies as a proposed approach of how we, the ad industry, would handle this incredible branding opportunity.

Look forward to seeing you at 2pm.

May 20th Nightly Press Traffic Summary

There is a blog post from HRC on small business on LinkedIn that will go up tomorrow, NYT will break that story and LinkedIn PR will push it around to tech outlets.

CNN/Dan Merica's piece on curbing drug abuse emerging key issue for Hillary should pop tomorrow.

TIME is doing a piece on the small business policy that Hillary Clinton rolled out Tuesday -- we stressed her efforts to loosen unnecessary regulations on small banks while staying tough on big banks/Wall St to continue to protect consumers.

New York Times (Jonathan Martin) is planning to do a piece on our apparent focus on mobilizing the base over persuading the middle, contrasting it with WJC's campaigns and HRC's '08 campaign. Robby is going to talk to him to explain that we are doing both at the same time -- our progressive positions are also mainstream positions.

POLITICO (Annie Karni) has a story coming tomorrow on us acquiring the Ready For Hillary email list.

Jonathan Allen at Vox wants to do a story, inspired by her quote on Sid Blumenthal, about the way in which Hillary chooses to keep old friends around and involved even when it may be politically unwise.

WSJ/Nicholas doing a story on GOP outside groups expected to outside Dem outside group, Priorities struggling/staff shakeup

POLITICO Magazine (Michael Hirsh) is doing a deep dive on the Obama Administration's Libya policy for their next print edition. It will of course cover Benghazi, but it also seems like he will raise the question as to whether the admin lacked coherent overall policy from the beginning in Libya.

As an FYI, the New York Times has FOIA'ed universities where HRC has given speeches for documents and emails related to those appearances.

I have one volunteer ethics lawyers who is interested in coming in-house as a deputy or could take the lead. Also, we need to add to the ranks of our volunteer lawyers to manage the ethics vetting process. Thanks, Cassandra

Okay, we need to stop this before someone gets hurt!

I don't think we should go with something that only hits the Republicans (Rich and Anzo's latest aggressive options).

Trying to narrow, these are my top picks

Strong Economy
Safe America
(agree on that order)
Our dual strength message

Your vote has never mattered more.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Caucusing has never mattered more.
Hillary Clinton. President.
Our raise the stakes message

Our fights, are her fights
(Sorry Mandy)
Consistent with where we've been, about you

She's got what it takes (or Hillary's got what it takes)
Her ability to get it done (but perhaps awkward on a sign)

If we cannot hit on that do people have strong feelings about changing to Making a Difference for You, or stick with what we have? We don't have to change, but felt that Fighting for You wasn't right anymore and we wanted to signal a change for the closing stretch.

With respect to MPB's item 1 - I only think it makes sense for me to sign the letter related to Carlsbad. It is in the capacity of DA Chair that I would be signing. The reason for sequencing the letters is so that we are able to attract potential donors (mostly east coast) to the conference. We all wear multiple hats in this work and the FFA Board and Amy's willingness to support the alliance is greatly appreciated.

Democrats See a Field of One Heading to 2016

By NICHOLAS CONFESSORE , JONATHAN MARTIN and MAGGIE HABERMANMARCH 11, 2015

They shrug off questions about Hillary Rodham Clinton 's email habits. They roll with the attacks on her family's foundation, the big checks from foreign governments, the torpid response of her not-yet-campaign.

They have little choice: As Mrs. Clinton prepares to begin her second presidential campaign amid a froth of criticism and outrage, Democrats are not just Ready for Hillary — as supporters named one pro-Clinton "super PAC " — they are desperate for her.

Congressional Democrats are counting on a strong Clinton campaign to help lift them back into the majority. Party leaders at all levels want her fund-raising help and demographic appeal. And from the top of the party to its grass roots, Mrs. Clinton's pseudo-incumbency is papering over significant disadvantages: a weak bench, a long-term House minority and a white middle class defecting to the Republican Party faster than the Democrats' hoped-for demographic future is expected to arrive.

Mrs. Clinton, many Democrats say, is simply too big to fail.

"There is no one else — she's the whole plan," said Sarah Kovner, a leading Democratic donor and fund-raiser in New York. "She is by far the most experienced and qualified person we could possibly nominate. Not even on the horizon but on the far horizon."

Her party's urgent need for her to succeed explains, in part, how Democrats have responded to revelations that Mrs. Clinton used a private email address for all of her government correspondence as secretary of state and skirted public and congressional records requests. But it also suggests the Democrats' peril: Should Mrs. Clinton falter, the party has no easy way to replace her.

"Anytime you have all your eggs in one basket, it is a concern," said Gov. Jack Markell of Delaware, acknowledging the risk Democrats were running by deferring to Mrs. Clinton. "Although if you're going to have them all in one, this basket is a good place to be."

For two years, Mrs. Clinton has been the prohibitive favorite for the Democratic presidential nomination, keeping the party's strongest alternatives on the sidelines and depriving those who remain of potential donors and staff. Senior Democrats have built a multimillion-dollar political infrastructure to pave the way for her candidacy, and while Republicans openly fretted about the need for a candidate of their own who could match her, Democrats gently tamped down concerns that the party was too heavily invested in a single flag bearer. For House Democrats, Mrs. Clinton's impending candidacy has figured centrally in pitches to donors, who are skeptical of their chances to win the chamber back.

"There are between 60 and 75 truly competitive districts in the House," said Representative Steve Israel of New York, who led the House Democrats' campaign efforts last year and has told donors that Mrs. Clinton will need a Democratic Congress to work with. "Hillary Clinton is the only Democrat I know who can go into every single one of those districts and do well — with the possible exception of her husband."

Perhaps more significantly, Mrs. Clinton's long-looming candidacy has acted as a powerful unifying force in the Democratic Party .

Her broad appeal among Democratic voters has prevented liberal complaints against the party's Wall Street faction from mushrooming into an electoral insurgency. Her star power — and the potential for a ceiling-breaking White House victory — has helped obscure a vexing reality for the post-Obama Democratic Party: As much as it advertises itself as the party of a rising generation, the Democrats' farm team is severely undermanned, and many of its leading lights are eligible for Social Security .

Jerry Brown, perhaps the most successful big-state Democratic governor in the country, is 76. (He ran for president two decades ago — as the anti-Clinton candidate.) The top four congressional Democrats are all 70 or older. And as Democrats look for new recruits to run in 2016, there are fewer up-and-comers, and more prospects older than 60 looking to make up for losses in previous elections, including Joe Sestak of Pennsylvania, Russ Feingold of Wisconsin and Ted Strickland of Ohio, who are all eying Senate seats

"When people bring up the presidential race to me, they bring up Secretary Clinton," said Jason Kander, 33, Missouri's secretary of state and a Democrat running for the Senate. "I have just not had many conversations where people talk about different candidates."

Down the ticket, the party's problems are worse. The two midterm elections since President Obama's 2008 victory have wiped out an entire generation of Democratic state officeholders, costing the Democrats more than 900 state legislative seats and 11 governorships, according to an internal Democratic National Committee assessment released last month.

Republicans have been more aggressive in steering donors to less glamorous state races, electing governors and legislative majorities whose sweeping rollback of union rights has further damaged Democrats in states in which they are already reeling.

"The other side has killed us at that stuff," said Steve Rosenthal, a Democratic strategist.

The shift has provided Republicans an advantage in redistricting and fund-raising: In 10 top presidential swing states, according to data collected by the National Institute on Money in State Politics , Republican state parties raised $350 million over the last four years, compared with $215 million for Democratic state parties.

"Obviously, Florida's struggled at the state level for Democrats," said Mark S. Pafford, the Democratic leader in the state's House of Representatives, where Democrats now hold just over a third of the seats. His hope, Mr. Pafford said, is that a candidate of Mrs. Clinton's stature "reinvigorates the base to go out and find motivation in Democratic leadership."

Mrs. Clinton's undisputed fund-raising prowess has also overshadowed financial problems for the national Democratic Party and liberal groups supporting it.

The Democratic National Committee, largely neglected by Mr. Obama, has steadily raised less money than its Republican counterpart over the last two years. The party chairwoman, Representative Debbie Wasserman Schultz of Florida, is unpopular in the White House and locked in a vicious feud with one of the party's big donors. And while conservative outside groups are on track to raise more than $1 billion during the 2016 cycle, the main Democratic "super PAC ," Priorities USA Action, is still struggling to secure more than a handful of million-dollar commitments from big donors.

Mrs. Clinton, most Democrats believe, is the solution. No other candidate combines her ties to big donors with her appeal to small ones. Liberal activists are hostile to the party's second-best big-dollar fund-raiser, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo of New York; business donors are suspicious of the party's other popular small-donor draw, Senator Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts.

Even before Mrs. Clinton's recent problems, a few Democrats had openly fretted about their party's dependence on her. Deval Patrick, a former Massachusetts governor and an Obama supporter in 2008, said he "felt badly" for Mrs. Clinton and believed that voters would ultimately care about more substantive issues than her BlackBerry use.

But it might be better, Mr. Patrick suggested, for someone — anyone — to give Mrs. Clinton a run for her money.

"My view of the electorate is, we react badly to inevitability, because we experience it as entitlement, and that is risky, it seems to me, here in America," Mr. Patrick said. "I want Democrats to win."

Weaver For Congress
Standing up for Iowa values.

Dear Friend,

The clock is ticking--Our fundraising quarter comes to an end tomorrow at Midnight . To mark this occasion, our current representative is up to his old tricks. In a repeat performance of 2013 , Steve King is preparing to vote for yet another government shutdown in yet another effort to deny Americans access to quality, affordable healthcare.

Slashing funding for Planned Parenthood, a service that millions of men and women depend on every year, will be a potentially life-threatening congressional blunder. And this is in addition to the laundry list of programs and services that are delayed or cut-off when the government is shut down, including things like nutrition assistance for children.

This is just one more example of Steve King leading "the party of no" into another national travesty. The 4th Congressional District, the State of Iowa, and the country at-large deserve better. I want to represent you in Congress because we cannot afford another two years of Steve King and his obstructionist antics.

Right now we are only $4,200.00 away from our 3rd Quarter goal. We're looking for another 20 donors to chip in $100.00 today so we can stay on pace. If you're able, click on the button below and make your contribution today.

For Progress,

Kim Weaver

Subject: Re: Outline of finance structure

With respect to the “kickoff” strategy, I suggest launching a “founders”/“angel investors” group (name is just a placeholder) on day one for the first quarter of the campaign, with each member being asked to raise $X by the first FEC filing deadline. All donors who want to raise will be enlisted to this group - basically, the precursor to our official Finance Committee. And we set the minimum levels, benefits, and ground rules up front. For example, to be a “founder”, you are expected to raise $25K in primary money by the first FEC deadline. And then to be a Finance Committee member (our version of Pioneers and Rangers; again, name TBD), you are expected to raise a minimum of $50K (inclusive of the first $25K) during the primary campaign. And then down the road, we can decide if we want to give finance titles based 100% on fundraising performance. For example, we can have levels and corresponding merit-based titles at $50K, $100K, $250K, $500K, etc. And establish a fair and clear policy for how we count bundling (for example, if you bring in new raiser, you get credit for their first $25K but nothing beyond that).

For “friends” who want to help or who have asked for consulting roles, we either steer them to join the founders group (and then the finance committee) or if it makes sense, we create an ad hoc “finance advisory” group for the worker bee types to leverage their strengths and to make them feel included.

And I think for every elected official who gives their support to the campaign, we ask each of them to max out personally and from their candidate committee (and leadership PAC if we decide to accept leadership PAC $) and encourage them to join the Finance Committee and raise at least $25K by the first FEC deadline and $50K+ overall for the primary.

I think for the first quarter of the campaign, we leverage our senior campaign officials to headline recruitment briefings around the country; leverage HRC for direct fundraising events; and then in the 2nd quarter, we hold our first official Finance Committee meeting for raisers who successfully raised $25K+ and are pledging to raise $50K+. So that only those who deliver are invited to attend. Again, 100% merit based.

This committee would be a select group with demonstrated capacity to organize raisers. It would act as a test for people who desire a leadership role in the campaign's fundraising efforts. This could also be a place to direct people who have asked for a consulting role in the campaign.

Examples:
--Capricia Marshall?
--Brian Wolff?
--JB Pritzger?
--Laura Hartigan?

Eli doesn't know I'm nominating him for this. If you think it might go anywhere, I'll let him know.

I suspect there's tons of jockeying going on for top leadership roles, and we're not so good at jockeying here, so someone would have to champion this. Without a good champion, there's little point in wasting anybody's time, I'd guess.

And, as I said, if I lose Eli, it creates major problems for me. He's unique.

What an amazing moment, John. So satisfying.

I had a crazy, self-destructive idea. As you are trying to figure out how to run the successor org to the Obama campaign, I have a suggestion for leadership: Eli.

You know Eli, so I don't need to say much about this.

But he has done a truly remarkable job with MoveOn in general and especially this year. He's pivoted us into a positive, youth-oriented posture in just a matter of months -- noting the shift from being on defense (the loyal opposition) and moving into offense (the new majority). He's grown the base from 3M to 5M. And he did the most remarkable thing -- deciding not to compete with the Obama campaign in any way on field, and just jam energy into it. As you know, most organizations could not navigate that kind of opportunistic selflessness. We fed more than 1M volunteers. 600,000 in the battlegrounds. Not to mention the $88M our members gave. And to top it off -- more than 20M views of the GOTV "nonvoter" video. A youth, pop culture hit.

Eli also could serve a really important role in signaling and realizing movement connectivity with the permanent campaign.

Just a thought.

I mostly hope you don't pursue this, because it would create major problems for me: both in leading MoveOn and in differentiating MoveOn for our future work.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But I had to raise it, because what you are doing is so, so important. And I had to let you know that if you approach Eli, I won't be pissed.

I'm running in the most closely watched race in the country. Karl Rove, the Koch brothers, and their dark money friends are ALL watching. It's going to take all of us stepping up on this end of year deadline to hit our goal and show them our true grassroots strength.

If you've saved payment info with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately.

John --

This time of year, Americans around the country are taking the time to exchange heartfelt messages with friends and loved ones, reflecting on the past year. They write of achievements and setbacks, of births, graduations, promotions, and moves.

These messages allow us to overcome the miles that separate us. And they allow us to continue one of the most basic American traditions that has held folks close for centuries -- the simple sharing of stories.

And as families gather around holiday tables this season, we also have the opportunity to share the stories of the change this movement has achieved together.

It is a narrative woven by individuals across America -- in big cities and small towns, hospitals and classrooms, in auto manufacturing plants and auto supply stores.

These are stories of rebuilding, and of innovation. Stories of communities breathing new life into old roads and bridges, of local plants harnessing alternative fuel into new energy. Stories of small businesses getting up, dusting themselves off, and beginning to grow again. Stories of soldiers who served multiple tours of duty in Iraq now coming home -- and enjoying the holidays this year in the company of loved ones.

These are stories of progress.

They unite us, and they are ours to share.

We've pulled many of them together in one place, PROGRESS . You can see what our reforms have meant to Americans in every state -- block by block, community by community.

Click here to read about stories of progress in your area -- and share them with your friends and family.

The reforms that we fought long and hard for are not talking points.

And their effects don't change based on the whims of politicians in Washington. They are achievements that have a real and meaningful impact on the lives of Americans around the country. They are achievements that would not have been possible without you. PROGRESS localizes them -- and brings them to life.

It tells of how a green technology business in Phoenix, Arizona, is using a grant through the Recovery Act's Transportation Electrification program to bring the first electric-drive vehicles and charging stations to cities around the country.

It tells how, thanks to closing the "donut hole" in prescription drug coverage, a diabetic woman in Burlington, Vermont will no longer have to choose between purchasing her monthly groceries or the insulin she needs to survive.

It tells about how 136,000 Pennsylvania residents' jobs were saved or created by the Recovery Act.

And about how, thanks to the Affordable Care Act, 22,900 small businesses in Utah's 2nd Congressional District are now eligible for health care tax credits -- and how 17,500 residents in Idaho's 1st with pre-existing conditions can no longer be denied coverage.

There are thousands more stories like these.

In the coming days, as we gather with our loved ones at dinner tables around the nation, let's pass them on. Let's celebrate the spirit of service and responsibility that brought them to fruition. And let's steady ourselves with the resolve to continue pressing forward.

Because the coming year will hold new challenges -- battles that have yet to be fought, and stories of progress that have yet to be written.

Take a look at the progress we've made in your area -- and share the stories you read with your friends and family:

http://progress.barackobama.com

Happy holidays, and God bless,

Barack

P.S. -- Last week, seven OFA volunteers joined me at the White House for a special meeting -- and they brought along your feedback from the Vote 2010 campaign. It was incredibly meaningful for me to be able to hear directly from supporters like you. And your input will be front and center as we plot our course moving forward into the new year. Please take a couple minutes to check out some photos and stories from the meeting.

For the last three weeks, I along with Stan Greenberg, Anna Greenberg, Will Robinson, Laura Nichols and Carla Ohringer Engle, have been convening donor conference calls, looking at polling numbers, talking with major organizations, and testing message ideas from a variety of wonderful creative people (from DC, LA and Madison Avenue). It's been an exciting process, and I'm deeply grateful to all of you who have been involved.

We have already accomplished a lot. We've tested over 20 different ad, online, direct mail and message ideas. We've worked closely with some of the best progressive groups, both at the national and state levels to talk through action plans and message delivery. We have commitments toward outside efforts of around $8,000,000 for and from the various groups we are working with.

We have now reached a critical moment in our efforts. The organizations with whom we've been working are reaching the point where they will need to know whether they will have the funds available to conduct all the activities they have planned, including those which we have discussed with them. Here are the groups that we have a great deal of confidence in, and some examples of the interesting and effective work they plan to do:

- Women's Voices. Women Vote Action Fund has a close-of-business deadline tomorrow (Friday, Oct. 3) in terms of how much direct mail to order from their printer, and they have a donor wiling to pay for $1,000,000 of it if the money gets matched by other donors. Their mail pieces have a powerful message and are directly aimed at the most volatile, hard to reach people in American politics: older, blue collar women.

- Health Care for America Now has a powerful ad they want to run that dramatically shows the problems with the health care proposals now on the table. In tests, it was found that information about the health care plan was new to people who viewed the ad and really resonated with them. Donations to this effort would likely be publicly disclosed.

- Progressive Future has a donor willing to match any dollars coming in for door-to-door voter education on major issues, but to have door knockers and get them out in the field; they need to know right away if people are willing to help with match.

- Planned Parenthood Action Fund has a hard hitting ad about the rape/violence against women issue. They have a strong ad buy up in key states, but are trying to raise money to keep it on the air and expand the buy. Donations to this effort would likely be publicly disclosed.

- If you want to give to the general work we are doing, to make sure we can continue to test message ideas and coordinate work with these groups you can give to American Family Voices (501c4) or AFV Voters Alliance. American Family Voices and AFV Voters' Alliance always serve as granting organizations and are continuing that role, in addition to executing much of the creative development, research and message testing.
There are many organizations doing terrific work, we have only highlighed a few. Greg Speed at America Votes can help you if you want information about what other groups are doing where, and his matching grant program that also ends expires tomorrow (Friday, Oct. 3) to get money to these groups.

It is getting very late to make a difference on shaping the debate, so if you are willing to help, let us know by the end of the day tomorrow, and for your convenience, please feel free to send you donations through our office.

It is critical that we know what kind of overall budgets these organizations and groups have to work with. Thank you for your interest in all of this and all you are doing to help these groups.

All my best,

Mike

Great, John. I will pass the times along to Hank plus Eryn's number. And since you are flying United, I do recommend the Fog of War documentary about MacNamara. Safe travels! Dan

Yes, we agree. We wanted to include him this morning, but he is with Maggie and her family. We will include him going forward.

Didn't we agree yesterday to include Jake in this process?
I know Dan is there but was Jake invited to join? I know she expects that he's part of this process and has seen the language.

Americans have fought their way back from tough economic times but the deck is still stacked for those at the top. I'm running because everyday Americans and their families need a champion and I want to be that champion. When our families are strong, America's strong.

It's not enough that corporations are raking in record profits and that CEO pay is through the roof, your family needs to be able to get ahead too. You need to have a little more so you can worry a little less.

(Have some savings you know you can fall back on, put money aside for retirement, pay off your student loans, start a small business, be able to give your children choices for their future.)

Now, I know it's not going to be easy. We face some pretty powerful forces. But I've spent my whole life fighting for children, for families, standing up for America. And I think people know...I don't quit.

For me, it isn't enough for American families to just get by, you deserve to get ahead and stay ahead. It's your time.

On the young people and families point, we did ask about this in our Pittsburgh groups last week with the youngest of the groups (17-24), and they were embracing of the word. They had a very expansive definition of family, going beyond blood relatives, but they all were accepting of the word and felt it applied to them. Nobody said they felt single/ individual, or that they felt left out from the “families.”

Two things which may seem inconsistent: First graph, use and placement of everyday Americans seems forced and political. Second, are we overusing families to the exclusion of people, particulary young people, who see themselves on their own. Rest seems fine to me.

I think this is worth spending some time on here. I think there are some nuances that are important as well some big things --- like their aspiration for a sense of “financial freedom” that ladders up a bit to bigger goals i.e. getting ahead along is not enough – they want to get ahead and stay ahead. I know Jim hates “last prosperity” but after years of feeling that their gains were impermanent and there was no solid footing they seem to be reaching for more. .

Most important things to look at are Q 5 ,6 on optimism/pessimism and more confidence than anxiety.

Battery on factors for M.C. life that is on p. 15-16 with summary table on 17. – Focus on p. 15 and top 5 items – all are over 49% on 7s and 71+ on 6+7; then next tier down which are at 43+ and 60+.

Econ attitudes on page 21 – Not that top 6 items have a focus on the future for most part and may steer towards sounding a little bigger and less incremental – there is an aspiration here for “financial freedom” that lets them look ahead a little more. – Not the last item in battery on p. 57 is that they have low optimism for next generation but batter on page 15 makes clear that being able to give your child choices about their future is an extremely important factor in middle class life.

See you shortly.
